P R E F A C E.

THE principal object which I have had in view in this volume, as in the two which preceded it, has been to assist the researches of those Hindus who may desire to investigate critically the most important points in the civil and religious history of their nation. Having shown in the First Part that the mythical and legendary accounts, given in the Puranas, etc., regarding the origin of the caste system which has long prevailed in India, are mutually contradictory and totally insufficient to establish the truth of the popular belief regarding the distinct creation of four separate tribes; and having endeavoured to prove, in the Second Part, by a variety of arguments, drawn chiefly from comparative philology and from the contents of the Rig-veda, that the Hindus are descended from a branch of the Indo-Germanic stock, which dwelt originally along with the other cognate races, in Central Asia, and subsequently migrated into Northern Hindustan, where the Brahmanical religion and institutions were developed and matured;—I now come, in this Third Part, to consider more particularly the history of the Vedas, regarded as the sacred Scriptures of the Hindus, and the inspired source from which their religious and philosophical systems (though, to a great extent, founded also on reasoning and speculation) profess to be mainly derived ; or with which, at least, they all pretend to be in harmony.

When I speak, however, of the history of the Veda, I am reminded that I am employing a term which will suggest to the philosophical reader the idea of a minute and systematic account of all the various opinions which the Indians have held in regard to their sacred books from the commencement, through all the successive stages of their theological development, down to the present time. To do anything like this, however, would be a task demanding an extent of research far exceeding that to which I can pretend. At some future time, indeed, we may hope that a history of the theological and speculative ideas of the Indians, which shall treat this branch also of the subject, may be written by some competent scholar. My own design is much more modest. I only attempt to show what are the opinions on the subject of the Veda, which have been entertained by certain distinct sets of writers whom I may broadly divide into three classes—(1) the mythological, (2) the scholastic, and (3) the Vedic.

The first, or mythological class, embraces the writers of the different Puranas and Itihāsas, and partially those of the Brāhmanas and Upanishads, who, like the compilers of the Puranas, frequently combine the mythological with the theosophic element.

The second, or scholastic class, includes the authors of the different philosophical schools, or Darśanas, with their scholiasts and expositors, and the commentators on the Vedas. The whole of these writers belong to the class of systematic or philosophical theologians; but as their speculative principles differ, it is the object of each particular school to explain and establish the origin and authority of the Vedas on grounds conformable to its own fundamental dogmas, as well as to expound the doctrines of the sacred books in such a way as to harmonise with its own special tenets.

The third class of writers, whose opinions in regard to the Vedas I have attempted to exhibit, is composed (1) of the rishis themselves, the authors of the Vedic hymns, and (2) of the authors of the Upanishads, which, though works of a much more recent date, and for the most part of a different character from the hymns, are yet regarded by later Indian writers as forming, equally with the latter, a part of the Veda. As the authors of the hymns, the earliest of them at least, lived in an age of simple conceptions, and of spontaneous and childlike devotion, we shall find that, though some of them appear, in conformity with the spirit of their times, to have regarded their compositions as in a certain degree the result of divine inspiration, their primeval and elementary ideas on this subject form a strong contrast to the artificial and systematic definitions of the later scholastic writers. And even the authors of the Upanishads, though they, in a more distinct manner, claim a superhuman authority for their own productions, are very far from recognizing the rigid classification which, at a subsequent period, divided the Vedic writings from all other religious works, by a broad line of demarcation.

It may conduce to the convenience of the reader, if I furnish here a brief survey of the opinions of the three classes of writers above described, in regard to the Vedas, as these opinions are shown in the passages which are collected in the present volume. And this becomes the more expedient, as, since the body of this work was composed, I have discovered some additional texts of considerable importance, representing the tenets of the Mīmānsaka and Naiyāyika schools, either in fuller detail or under somewhat different aspects, which I have had to throw into an appendix, and to which it is therefore the more necessary that I should here draw the reader's attention in connection with the other texts of the same schools, which are cited in the earlier part of the collection.

The first chapter (p. 1-113) contains texts exhibiting the opinions on the origin, division, inspiration, and authority of the Vedas, which have been held by Indian authors subsequent to the collection of the Vedic Hymns, and consequently embraces the views of the first two of the classes of writers above specified, viz., (1) the mythological and (2) the scholastic. In the first Section (pp. 3-6), I adduce texts from the Śatapatha Brahmana, the Chhandogya Upanishad, and the Institutes of Manu, in which the first three Vedas are described as having been produced from fire, air, and the sun. In the second Section (pp. 6-12) are quoted two passages from the Vishnu and Bhāgavata Puranas, which represent the four Vedas to have issued from the mouth of Brahmā at the creation; a third from the Vrihad Aranyaka Upanishad, which describes the Vedas, as well as other śāstras, as being the breath of Brahma; several from the Harivanśa, which speak of the Vedas as produced from the Gāyatrī, or as created by Brahmā; another from the Mahābhārata, which describes Sarasvatī as the mother of the Vedas; with two from the Rik and Atharva Vedas, one of which derives the Vedas from the mystical victim Purusha, and the other makes them spring from Time. In page 227 of the Appendix a second passage of the Atharva-veda is cited, in which the Vedas are declared to have sprung from the leavings of the sacrifice (uchchhishta). Another text is quoted from Manu, which describes the Vedas, along with certain other objects, as being the second manifestation of the Sattva-guna, or pure principle, while Brahma is one of its first manifestations. Two further quotations from the Vishnu Purana assert the eternity of the Veda and its oneness with Vishnu. The third Section (pp. 12-19) contains various passages from Manu, in which the great dignity, power, authority, and efficacy of the Veda are celebrated; together with two other texts from the same author and the Vishnu Purana, in which a certain impurity is predicated of the Sāma-veda; and two more from the Vāyu and Brahma-vaivartta Puranas, which derogate in some degree from the consideration of the Vedas, by setting up a counter claim to respect in favour of the Puranas. A further passage is quoted from the Mundaka Upanishad, in which the Vedas and their appendages are designated as the "inferior science," in contrast to the "superior science," the knowledge of Soul. The fourth Section (pp. 20-31) describes the division of the Vedas in the third or Dvāpara age, by Vedavyāsa and his four pupils, according to texts of the Vishnu, Vāyu, and Bhāgavata Puranas; and then adduces a different account, asserting their division in the second or Tretā age, by the King Purūravas, according to another passage of the same Bhāgavata Purana, and a text of the Mahābhārata (though the latter is silent regarding Purūravas). Section fifth (pp. 31-39) contains passages from the Vishnu and Vāyu Puranas and the Śatapatha Brahmana, regarding the schism between the adherents of the Yajur-veda, as represented by the different schools of Vaiśampāyana and Yājñavalkya, and quotes certain remarks of Prof. Weber on the same subject, with some other texts, as adduced and illustrated by that scholar, on the hostility of the Atharvanas towards the other Vedas, and of the Chhandogas towards the Rig-veda.

Section vi. (pp. 39-52) contains extracts from the works of Sāyana and Mādhava, the commentators on the Rik and Taittirīya Yajur Vedas, in which they both define the characteristics of the Veda, and state certain arguments in support of its authority. Sāyana (pp. 40-47), after noticing the objections urged against his views by persons of a different school, and defining the Veda as a work consisting of Mantra and Brahmana, asserts that it is not derived from any personal, or at least not from any human, author (compare note 39, p. 51); and rests its authority on its own declarations, on its self-proving power, on the smṛiti (i.e., non-vedic writings of eminent saints), and on common notoriety. He then encounters some other objections raised against the Veda on the score of its containing passages which are unintelligible, dubious, absurd, contradictory, or superfluous. Mādhava (pp. 47-52) defines the Veda as the work which alone reveals the supernatural means of attaining future felicity; explains that males only, belonging to the three superior castes, are competent to study its contents; and asserts that, inasmuch as it is eternal, it is a primary and infallible authority. This eternity of the Veda, however, he appears to interpret as not being absolute, but as dating from the first creation, when it was produced from Brahma, though, as he is free from defects, the Veda, as his work, is self-proved.

Section vii. (pp. 52-73) contains the views of Jaimini and Bādarayana the (alleged) authors of the Mīmāṃsā and Brahma (or Vedānta) Sūtras on the eternity of the Veda. Jaimini asserts that sound, or words, are eternal, that the connection between words and the objects they represent also, is not arbitrary or conventional, but eternal, and that consequently the Vedas convey unerring information in regard to unseen objects. This view he defends against the objections of the Naiyāyikas, insisting that the names, derived from those of certain sages, by which particular parts of the Vedas are designated, do not prove those sages to have been their authors, but merely their students; while none of the names occurring in the Veda are those of temporal beings, but all denote some objects which have existed eternally. Some of these notions are further enforced in a passage from the summary of the Mīmāṃsā doctrine, given in the Sarva-darśana-sangraha, which I have quoted in the Appendix (pp. 190-206). The writer first notices the Naiyāyika objections to the Mīmāṃsaka tenet that the Veda had no personal author, viz., (1) that any tradition to this effect must have been interrupted at the past dissolution of the universe; (2) that it would be impossible to prove that no one had ever recollected any such author; (3) that the sentences of the Veda have the same character as all other sentences; (4) that the inference,—drawn from the present mode of transmitting the Vedas from teacher to pupil,—that the same mode of transmission must have gone on from eternity, breaks down by being equally applicable to any other book; (5) that the Veda is in fact ascribed to a personal author in a passage of the book itself; (6) that sound is not eternal, and that when we recognize letters as the same we have heard before, this does not prove their identity or eternity, but is merely a recognition of them as belonging to the same species as other letters we have heard before; (7) that though Parameśvara (God) is naturally incorporeal, he may have assumed a body in order to reveal the Veda, etc. The writer then states the Mīmāṃsaka answers to these arguments thus: What does this alleged ‘production by a personal author’ (pauruṣheyatva) mean? The Veda, if supposed to be so produced, cannot derive its authority (a) from inference (or reasoning), as fallible books employ the same process. Nor will it suffice to say (b) that it derives its authority from its truth: for the Veda is defined to be a book which proves that which can be proved in no other way. And even if Parameśvara (God) were to assume a body, he would not, in that state of limitation, have any access to supernatural knowledge. Further, the fact that different śākhās or recensions of the Vedas are called after the names of particular sages, proves no more than that these recensions were studied by those sages, and affords no ground for questioning the eternity of the Vedas,—an eternity which is proved by the fact of our recognizing letters when we meet with them. These letters are the very identical letters we had heard before, for there is no evidence to show either that letters of the same sort (G's, for instance) are numerically different from each other, or that they are generic terms, denoting a species. The apparent differences which are observable in the same letter, result merely from the particular characteristics of the persons who utter it, and do not affect its identity. This is followed by further reasoning in support of the same general view; and the writer then arrives at the conclusion, which he seems to himself to have triumphantly established, that the Veda is underived and authoritative. After noticing the different grounds on which authoritativeness, and non-authoritativeness, respectively, are rested by the principal Indian schools, the Naiyāyika is next introduced as raising another difficulty, as to the self-dependent (or self-derived) authority which is claimed for the Veda. What, he asks, is the source of this self-dependent authority? He gives four conceivable definitions of what it may be supposed to mean, and shows to his own satisfaction that they are all untenable. The Mīmāṃsaka then interposes; and brings forward a fifth definition. His conclusion appears to be that authoritativeness springs from the constituents or totality of knowledge.

The question of the effect produced on the Vedas by the dissolutions of the world, which is raised among the other Naiyāyika objections above quoted, without receiving any solution in the Mīmāṃsaka reply, is noticed in some extracts from Patanjali's Mahābhāshya and its commentators, which have been adduced by Prof. Goldstücker in the Preface to his Mānava-kalpa Sūtra, and have been partly reprinted in my Appendix (pp. 228 ff.). It is admitted by Patanjali, that, though the sense of the Veda is permanent, the order of their letters has not always remained the same, and that this difference is exhibited in the different recensions of the Kāthakas and other schools. Patanjali himself does not say what is the cause of this alteration in the order of the letters; but his commentator, Kaiyyata, states that the order was disturbed during the great dissolutions, etc., and had to be restored (though with variations) by the eminent science of the rishis. Kullūka and Sankara, on the other hand (see pp. 5, 72, and 213, note 10), maintain that the Veda was preserved (unaltered, I presume) in the memory of Brahmā during the periods of dissolution.

In the extract given in pp. 65-73 from his commentary on the Brahma Sūtras,¹ Śankara, while he follows the author of those Sūtras, and Jaimini, in basing the authority of the Vedas on the eternity of sound, finds it necessary to meet an objection that, as the gods mentioned in the Veda had confessedly an origin in time, the words which designate those gods cannot be eternal, but must have originated coevally with the created objects which they denote, since eternal words could not have an eternal connection with non-eternal objects. This difficulty he tries to overcome (by tacitly abandoning the ground taken by Jaimini, that the Veda contains no references to non-eternal objects, and) by asserting that the eternal connection of words is not with individual objects, but with the species to which these objects belong, and that Indra and the other gods are proved by the Veda to belong to species. Śankara then goes on to assert, on the authority of Brahma Sūtra, i. 3, 28, fortified by various texts from the Vedas and the smṛitis, that the gods and the world generally are produced (though not in the sense of evolution out of a material cause) from the word of the Vedas (see p. 4, and note, pp. 4 and 5) in the form of sphoṭa. This last term will be explained below. It should also be noticed here that in another place (i. 1, 3) the Brahma Sūtras (see note 39, in pp. 51, 52) declare that Brahma was the source of the Veda, and that, on this foundation, Śankara argues that Brahma must be omniscient. If, however, the Vedas are eternal and apparently self-existent, it is not easy to see how they can be at the same time the work of Brahma, and a proof of his omniscience.²

In opposition to the tenets of the Mīmāṃsakas, who hold the eternity (or the eternal self-existence) of the Veda, and to the kindred dogmas of the Vedānta, as just expounded, Gotama, the author of the Nyāya aphorisms, denies (Section viii. pp. 73-81) the eternity of sound; and after vindicating the Veda from the charges of falsehood, self-contradiction, and tautology, deduces its authority from the authority of the wise, or competent, person who was its author. It does not clearly appear from Gotama's aphorism who the wise person was whom he regards as the maker of the Veda. If he did not believe in a God, (see Appendix, note v. p. 216), he must have regarded the rishis as its authors. The later Naiyāyika writers, however, as the author of the Tarka Sangraha (Appendix, p. 209) and of the Kusumānjali (Appendix, pp. 211-216) clearly refer the Veda to Īśvara (God) as its framer. Udayana, the author of the Kusumānjali, controverts the opinion that the existence of the Veda from eternity can be proved by a continuous tradition, as such a tradition must, he says, have been interrupted at the dissolution of the world, which preceded the existing creation (see above, pp. xi. xiii.) He, therefore (as explained by his commentator), infers an eternal and omniscient author of the Veda; asserting that the Veda is pauruṣheya, or derived from a personal author; that many of its own texts imply this; and that the appellations given to its particular śākhās or recensions, are derived from the names of those sages whose persons were assumed by Īśvara, when he uttered them at the creation.

² It is true that Śankara gives an alternative interpretation of this Sūtra, viz., that it may be understood as meaning that the Vedas, etc., are "the source, or cause, or proof of Him, i.e., by enabling us rightly to understand his nature." (Yonih kārāṇam pramāṇam asya Brahmaṇo yathāvat svarūpādhiḡame). But the explanation given in the text is the first given, and it is not repudiated by Śankara. See Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Vedānta, pp. 7-10.

Kapila, the author of the Sāṅkhya Aphorisms (pp. 81-86), agrees with the Nyāya aphorist in denying the eternity of the Veda, but, in conformity with his own principles, differs from Gotama in denying its derivation from a personal (i.e., here, a divine) author, because there was no person (i.e., as his commentator explains, no God) to make it. Vishnu, the chief of liberated beings, though omniscient, could not, he argues, have made the Veda, owing to his impassiveness, and no other person could have done so from want of omniscience. And even if the Veda have been uttered by the primeval Purusha, it cannot be called his work, as it was breathed forth by him unconsciously. (Compare the passage from the Vedāntist Śankara, pp. 104 and 105.) Kapila agrees with Jaimini in ascribing a self-demonstrating power to the Veda, and differs from the Naiyāyikas in not deriving its authority from correct knowledge possessed by an utterer. He proceeds to controvert the existence of such a thing as sphoṭa (a modification of sound which is assumed by the Mīmāṃsakas, and described as single, indivisible, distinct from individual letters, existing in the form of words, and constituting a whole), and to deny the eternity of sound.

In the ninth Section (pp. 86-107) some short reasonings in support of the supernatural origin of the Veda are quoted from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara (a condensed account of the Mīmāṃsa system) and from the Vedārtha-prakāśa (the commentary on the Taittirīya Yajur-veda). The arguments in both passages (pp. 86-89) are to the same effect, and contain nothing that has not been already in substance anticipated in the preceding summaries of the Mīmāṃsa doctrine. In reference to their argument that no author of the Veda is remembered, I have noticed here that the supposition which an objector might urge, that the rishis, the acknowledged utterers of the hymns, might also have been their authors, is guarded against by the tenet, elsewhere maintained by Indian writers, that the rishis were merely seers of the pre-existing sacred texts. Some further passages are next adduced (pp. 90-96) from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, from Kullūka's commentary on Manu, and from Śankara Achāryya, to show that a distinct line of demarcation is drawn by the scholastic writers between the Veda, on the one hand, and all other classes of Indian scriptures, such as the smṛiti (including the Institutes of Manu, the Puranas, and Itihāsas, etc.), on the other, the first being regarded as an independent and infallible director, while the others are (in theory) held to be only authoritative guides, in so far as they are founded on, and coincide with, the Veda. The practical effect of this distinction is, however, much lessened by the fact that the ancient sages (such as Manu), the authors of the smṛitis, are looked upon as having had access to Vedic texts now no longer extant, as having held communion with the gods, and as having enjoyed a clearness of intuition into divine mysteries which is denied to later mortals. Śankara, however (as shewn in pp. 97-99), does not regard all the ancients as having possessed this infallible insight into truth, but exerts all his ingenuity to explain away the claims (though sanctioned by an Upanishad) of Kapila, who was not orthodox, according to his Vedantic standard, to rank as an authority. In his depreciation of Kapila, however, Śankara is opposed to the Bhāgavata Purana and other standard works (pp. 99-100). I then proceed to observe (pp. 101-103) that though in ancient times the authors of the different philosophical systems (Darśanas) no doubt asserted the truth of their respective opinions, in opposition to all the antagonistic systems, yet in modern times the superior orthodoxy of the Vedānta appears to be generally recognized; while the authors of the other systems are regarded, e.g., by Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, as, amid all their diversities, having in view, as their ultimate scope, the support of the Vedāntic theory. The same view, in substance, is taken by Vijnāna Bhixu, the commentator on the Sāṅkhya Sūtras, who (Appendix, pp. 217-226) maintains that Kapila's system, though atheistic, is not irreconcilable with the Vedānta and other theistic schools, as its denial of an Īśvara (God) is only practical, or regulative, and merely enforced in order to withdraw men from the too earnest contemplation of an eternal and perfect Deity, which would impede their study of the distinction between matter and spirit. To teach men this discrimination as the great means of attaining final liberation, is one of the two main objects, and strong points, of the Sāṅkhya philosophy, and here it is authoritative; while its atheism is admitted to be its weak side, and on this subject it has no authority. Vijnāna Bhixu goes on to say that it is even supposable that theistic systems, in order to prevent sinners from attaining knowledge, may lay down doctrines partially opposed to the Vedas; and that though in these portions they are erroneous, they will still possess authority in the portions conformable to the śruti and smṛiti. He then quotes a passage from the Padma Purāna, in which the god Siva tells his consort Pārvatī that the Vaiśeshika, the Nyāya, the Sāṅkhya, the Purva-mīmāṃsā Darśanas, and the Vedāntic theory of illusion, are all systems infected by the dark or tāmasa principle, and consequently more or less unauthoritative. All theistic theories, however, are, as Vijnāna Bhixu considers, authoritative, and free from error on their own special subject. And as respects the discrepancy between the Sāṅkhya and the Vedānta, regarding the unity of Soul, he concludes that the former is not devoid of authority, as the apparent diversity of Souls is acknowledged by the Vedānta, and the discriminative knowledge which the Sāṅkhya teaches to the embodied soul is an instrument of liberation; and thus the two varying doctrines, if regarded as the one practical (or regulative), and the other real (or transcendental), will not be contradictory.

After thus deviating into the Appendix, I revert to the close of Section ninth (pp. 103-109) where it is shewn that the distinction drawn by the Indian commentators between the superhuman Veda and its human appendages, the Kalpa Sūtras, etc., as well as the smṛitis, is not borne out by certain texts which I have cited from the Vṛihad Āraṇyaka and Mundaka Upanishads. These two ancient treatises seem to place all the different sorts of śāstras or scriptures (including the four Vedas) in one and the same class, the former speaking of them all promiscuously as being the breath of Brahma, while the latter describes them all (except the Upanishads) as being parts of the "inferior science," in opposition to the "superior science," or knowledge of Brahma. In the same spirit as the Mundaka, the Chhandogya Upanishad also, as quoted in the Appendix (pp. 186, 187), includes the four Vedas in the same list with a variety of miscellaneous śāstras (which Nārada has studied without getting beyond the confines of exoteric knowledge), and never intimates (unless it be by placing them at the head of the list) that the former can claim any superiority over the other works with which they are associated.

In Section tenth (pp. 107-113) the arguments in support of the Veda, adduced in the philosophical systems, and by the various commentators, as above summarised, are recapitulated, and some remarks are made on these reasonings. My observations are chiefly directed to shew that the rishis are proved by the contents of the hymns to have been their real authors; and that numerous events which have occurred in time, are undoubtedly mentioned in the Vedas. This, as we have seen (above, p. xiv.) is admitted by Śankara.

The Second Chapter (pp. 114-183) exhibits the opinions of the rishis in regard to the origin of the Vedic hymns. It is intended to shew in detail that, though some at least of the rishis appear to have imagined themselves to be inspired by the gods in the expression of their religious emotions and ideas, they at the same time regarded the hymns as their own compositions, or the compositions of their forefathers, distinguishing between them as new and old, and describing their own authorship in terms which could only have been dictated by a consciousness of its reality. The first, second, and third Sections (pp. 116-140) contain a collection of passages from the Rig-veda in which a distinction is drawn (1) between the rishis as ancient and modern, and (2) between the hymns as older and more recent; and in which (3) the rishis describe themselves as the makers, fabricators, or generators of the hymns; with some additional texts in which such authorship appears to be implied, though it is not expressed. Section fourth (pp. 141-164) contains a variety of passages from the same Veda, in which (1) a superhuman character or supernatural faculties are ascribed to the earlier rishis; (2) the idea is expressed that the praises and ceremonies of the rishis were suggested and directed by the gods in general, or, in particular, by the goddess of speech, or by some other or others of the different deities of the Vedic pantheon. To illustrate, and render more intelligible and probable, the opinions which I have ascribed to the old Indian rishis, regarding their own inspiration, I have quoted (in the same Section, pp. 165-171) a number of passages from Hesiod and Homer to shew that the early Greek bards entertained a similar belief. I then advert (pp. 170-171) to the remarkable divergence between the later religious histories of Greece and of India. I next enquire briefly (in pp. 171-172) in what way we can reconcile the apparently conflicting ideas of the rishis on the subject of the hymns, considered, on the one hand, as their own productions, and, on the other, as inspired by the gods. Then follow (pp. 172-176) some further texts from the Rig-veda, in which a mystical, magical, or supernatural efficacy is ascribed to the hymns. These are succeeded (pp. 177-181) by a few quotations from the same Veda, in which the authors complain of their own ignorance; and by a reference to the contrast between these humble confessions, and the proud pretensions set up by later theologians in behalf of the Veda, and its capability of imparting universal knowledge. The ideas of the rishis regarding their own inspiration differ widely from the conceptions of later theorists; for while the former looked upon the gods, who were confessedly mere created beings, as the sources of supernal illumination, the latter either regard the Veda as eternal, or refer it to the eternal Brahma, or Īśvara, as its author. The fifth and last Section (pp. 181-183) adduces some texts from the Śvetāśvatara, Mundaka and Chhāndogya Upanishads, which show the opinions of the writers regarding their own inspiration, or that of their predecessors.

I have stated above that my primary design in the composition of this work, has been to aid the researches of Indian students and their European preceptors. But the volume, with all its imperfections, may perhaps also possess a certain interest for the divine and the philosopher, as furnishing a few documents to illustrate the course of theological opinion in a sphere far removed from the ordinary observation of the European student,—a course which, quite independently of the merits of the different tenets involved in the enquiry, will, I think, be found to present a remarkable parallel in various respects to that which is traceable in the history of those religious systems with which we are most familiar. In both cases we find that a primitive age of ardent emotion, of simple faith, and of unarticulated beliefs, was succeeded by a period of criticism and speculation, when the floating materials handed down by preceding generations were compared, classified, reconciled, developed into their consequences, and elaborated into a variety of scholastic systems.

For an account of the printed works or MSS. from which my Sanskrit extracts have been made, I may refer to the Prefaces of the First and Second Parts. And sources not there mentioned, are, I think, specified in the body of the work.

In regard to the texts quoted from the Rig-veda, I have derived the same sort of assistance from the French version of M. Langlois, which has been acknowledged in the Preface to the Second Part, p. vi. I am also indebted for some of the Vedic texts to Boehtlingk and Roth's Lexicon.

In this volume, as the reader will perceive, the Sanskrit extracts are entirely printed in the Roman character. I have no abstract preference for this mode of presenting Indian words; but its adoption has saved me much labour in the way of transcription, and it has also the advantage of being somewhat more economical.

PART THIRD.

OPINIONS REGARDING THE ORIGIN, DIVISION, INSPIRATION, AND AUTHORITY OF THE VEDAS, HELD BY INDIAN AUTHORS SUBSEQUENT TO THE COLLECTION OF THE HYMNS.

IN the preceding volume, I have furnished a general account of the ancient Indian writings, which are comprehended under the designation of Veda or Śruti. These works, which, as we have seen, constitute the earliest literature of the Hindus, are broadly divisible into two classes : (1) The Mantras or hymns, in which the praises of the gods are sung and their blessing is invoked ; (2) the Brahmanas, which embrace both the liturgical institutes in which the ceremonial application of those hymns is prescribed, and the Āranyakas and Upanishads, or theological treatises in which the spiritual aspirations which were gradually developed in the minds of the more devout of the Indian sages are preserved. It is, therefore, clear that the hymns constitute the original and, in some respects, the most essential portion of the Veda ; that the Brahmanas arose out of the hymns, and are subservient to their employment for the purposes of worship ; while the Upanishads give expression to ideas of a spiritual and mystical character which, though to some extent discoverable in the hymns and in the older portion of the Brahmanas, are much further matured, and assume a more exclusive importance, in these later treatises.

I content myself at present with referring the reader who desires to obtain a fuller idea of the nature of the hymns, and of the attributes there ascribed to the divinities to whom they are addressed, to the late Professor H. H. Wilson's translation of the earlier portion of the Rig-veda, and to the dissertation which he has prefixed to the first volume. At a later stage of this work, I hope to return to the mythology of the Veda, and to compare the conceptions which the rishis entertained of the different objects of their worship, with those representations of the deities who bore the same names, which occur in Indian writings of a later date, whether mythological or theological.

The task to which I propose in the meantime to devote myself, is to supply some account of the opinions entertained by Hindu writers, ancient and modern, in regard to the origin and authority of the Vedas. With this view I intend to collect from the Indian writings of the later Vedic era (the Brahmanas and Upanishads) as well as from the books, whether popular or scientific, of the post-vedic period (the Puranas, the Itihasas, the institutes of Manu, the commentaries on the Vedas, the aphorisms of the Darśanas, or systems of philosophy, and their commentators) such passages as refer to the origin, division, inspiration, and authority of the Vedas, and to compare the opinions there set forth with the ideas entertained on some of these subjects by the writers of the hymns themselves, as discoverable from numerous passages in their own compositions.

The mythical accounts which are given of the origin of the Vedas are mutually conflicting. In some passages they are said to have sprung from fire, air, and the sun. In other texts they are said to have been produced by the creator Brahmā from his different mouths, or by the intervention of the Gāyatrī, or to have sprung from the goddess Sarasvatī. I proceed to adduce these several passages.

SECT. I.—Elemental origin of the Vedas according to the Brahmanas, Upanishads, and Institutes of Manu.

I commence with a passage from the Śatapatha Brahmana, xi. 5, 8, 1 ff. Prajāpatir vā idam agre āsīt | Eka eva so 'kāmayata syām prajāyeya iti | So 'śrāmyat sa tapo 'tapyata | tasmāch chrāntāt tepānāt trayo lokā asrījyanta | prithivy antarīkṣāṃ dyauh | sa imāṃs trīṇ lokān abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptēbhyas trīṇi jyotīṃshy ajāyanta agnir yo 'yam pavate sūryaḥ | sa imāni trīṇi jyotīṃshy abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptēbhyas trayo vedā ajāyanta agner ṛigvedo vāyor yajurvedaḥ sūryāt sāmavedaḥ | sa imāṃs trīṇ vedān abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptēbhyas trīṇi śukrāṇy ajāyanta bhūr ity ṛigvedād bhūva iti yajurvedāt svar ity sāmavedāt | Tad ṛigvedenaiva hotram akurvata | yajurvedena ādhvaryavaṃ sāmavedena udgīthaṃ yad eva trayyai vidyāyai śukraṃ tena brahmatvam uchchakrāma. “Prajāpati was formerly this universe [i.e. the sole existence]. Being alone, he desired, ‘may I be, may I become.’ He toiled, he performed austerity. From him, when he had so toiled, and performed austerity, three worlds were created,—earth, atmosphere, and sky. He brooded over [i.e. infused warmth into] these three worlds. From them, thus brooded over, three lights were produced,—fire, this which purifies (i.e. pavana, or the air), and the sun. He brooded over these three lights. From them so brooded over, the three Vedas were produced,—the Rig-veda from fire, the Yajur-veda from air, and the Sāma-veda from the sun. He brooded over these three Vedas. From them so brooded over, three seeds [or essences] were produced,—bhūr from the Rig-veda, bhūvaḥ from the Yajur-veda, and sva from the Sāma-veda. Hence, with the Rig-veda they performed the function of the hotri; with the Yajur-veda, the office of the adhvaryu; with the Sāma-veda, the duty of the udgatri; while the function of the brahman arose through the essence of the triple science [i.e. the three Vedas combined].”

Chhāndogya Upanishad.—A similar passage (already quoted in Part Second, p. 200) occurs in the Chhândogya Upanishad (p. 288 of Dr. Röer's Ed.) Prajāpatir lokān abhyatapat | teshāṃ tapyamānānāṃ rasān prābrihad agnim pṛithivyā vāyum antarixād ādityaṃ divaḥ | sa etās tisro devatā abhyatapat | tāsāṃ tapyamānānāṃ rasān prābrihad agner ṛicho vāyor yajūṃshi sāma ādityāt | sa etāṃ trayiṃ vidyāṃ abhyatapat | tasyās tapyamānāyā rasān prābrihad bhūr iti ṛigbhyo bhūvar iti yajurbhyak svar iti sāmabhyak. "Prajāpati brooded over the worlds, and from them so brooded over, he drew forth their essences, viz., fire from the earth, air from the atmosphere, and the sun from the sky. He brooded over these three deities, and from them, so brooded over, he drew forth their essences,—from fire the Rik verses, from air the Yajush verses, and from the sun the Sāma verses. He then brooded over this triple science, and from it, so brooded over, he drew forth the essences,—from Rik verses the syllable bhūr, from Yajush verses bhūvaḥ, and from Sāma verses svaḥ."¹

Manu.—The same origin is assigned to the three Vedas in the following verses, from the account of the creation in Manu i. 21—23, where the idea is no doubt borrowed from the Brahmanas:—Sarveshāntu sa nāmāni karmāṇiḥa pṛithak pṛithak | Veda-śabdebhya evādau pṛithak saṃsthāścha nirmame | Karmātmanāṇcha devānāṃ so 'srijat prāniṇāṃ prabhuk | sādhyānāṇcha gaṇaṃ sūxmaṃ yajñāṇchaiva sanātanam | Agni-vāyuravibhyastu trayam brahma sanātanam | dudoha yajñasiddhyartham ṛig-yajuk-sāma-laxaṇam. "He [Brahmā] in the beginning fashioned from the words of the Veda² the names, functions,

² Kullūka wrongly explains this to mean, "Having understood them from the words of the Veda (Veda-śabdebhya eva avagamyā)."² It is similarly said in the Vishṇu Pn. i. 5, 58, ff. (p. 43 of Wilson's Trans.) Nāma rūpaṇcha bhūtānāṃ kṛityānāṇcha pravarttanam | Veda-śabdebhya evādau devādīnāṃ chakāra saḥ | ṛishīṇāṃ nūmadheyāni yathā-veda-śrutāni vai | yathā-niyoga-yogyāni sarveshāṃ api so 'karot. "In the beginning he ordained, from the words of the Veda, the names, forms, and functions of the gods and other creatures. He also assigned the names and the respective offices of all the rishis, as handed down by the Vedas." The same idea is repeated in and conditions of all [creatures]. That Lord also created the subtle order of active and living deities, and of Sādhyas, and eternal sacrifice. And in order to the performance of sacrifice, he drew forth from fire, from air, and from the sun, the triple eternal Veda, distinguished as Rik, Yajush, and Sāman.”

Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, the commentator, annotates thus on this passage :—Sanātanaṁ nityam | vedāpauruṣheyatva-paxo Manor abhīmataḥ | pūrva-kalpe ye vedās te eva Paramātma-mūrtter Brahmanāḥ sarvajñasya smṛity-ārūdhāḥ | tān eva kalpādāv agni-vāyu-ravibhya āchakarsha | srautaścha ayam artho na śaṅkanīyaḥ | tathācha śrutih | ‘agner ṛigvedo vāyor yajurveda ādityāt sāmaveda’ iti. “The word sanātana means ‘eternally pre-existing.’ The doctrine of the superhuman origin of the Vedas is maintained by Manu. The same Vedas which [existed] in the previous mundane era (Kalpa) were preserved in the memory of the omniscient Brahmā, who was one with the supreme spirit. It was those same Vedas that, in the beginning of the [present] Kalpa, he drew forth from fire, air, and the sun : and this dogma which is founded upon the Veda is not to be questioned, for the Veda says, ‘The Rig-veda comes from fire, the Yajur-veda from air, and the Sāma-veda from the sun.’”

Another commentator on Manu, Medhātithi, explains this passage in a more rationalistic fashion, “by remarking that the

the Mahābhārata, S’āntiparva, 8,533 :—Rishoyas tapasā vedān adhyaishanta divā-nisam | Anādīnidhanā vidyā vōg utsrishā svayambhuvā | Adau vedamayī divyā yataḥ sarvāḥ pravṛittayaḥ | Rishīmāṁ nāmadheyāni yāścha vedeshu śrishtayaḥ | Nānārū-pāñcha bhūtānām karmanāñcha pravarttayan [pravarttanam ?] | Vedāsadbhīya evādau nirmimīte sa īśvaraḥ. “Through devotion the rishis studied the Vedas both day and night. In the beginning, wisdom, without beginning or end, divine speech, formed of the Vedas, was sent forth by Svayambhū [the self-existent] : from her all activities [are derived]. It is from the words of the Veda that that Lord in the beginning frames the names of the rishis, the creations which are [recorded?] in the Vedas, the various forms of beings, and species of works.” In his introductory verses, Mādharma, the author of the Vedārtha-prakāśa, or Commentary on the Taittirīya Sanhitā, thus addresses Mahādeva :—Yasya nisvasitaṁ vedā yo vedebhya khilāṁ jagat | Nirmame tam ahaṁ vande vidyātīrtham Mahēsvaram. “I reverence Mahēsvara, the hallowed abode of sacred knowledge, whose breath the Vedas are, and who from the Vedas formed the whole universe.” We shall meet this idea again further on.

Rig-veda opens with a hymn to fire, and the Yajur-veda with one in which air is mentioned.”—Colebr. Misc. Ess. i. p. 11, note.

To the verses from Manu (i. 21—23) just cited, the following from the second book may be added, partly for the purpose of completing the parallel with the passages previously adduced from the Śatapatha Brahmana and the Chhāndogya Upanishad ;—Manu ii. 76, ff. Akārañchāpy ukārañcha makārañcha Prajāpatiḥ | Vedatrayād niraduhad bhūr-bhuvaḥ-svar ititi cha | 77. Tribhya eva tu vedebhyaḥ pādām pādām adūduhat | tad ity ṛichō'syāḥ sāvitryāḥ parameshthī prajāpatiḥ | . . . 81. Oṃkārapūrvikās tisro maḥāvyaḥṛitayo 'vyayāḥ | Tripadā chaiva gāyatrī vijñeyaṃ brahmaṇo mukham. 76. “Prajāpati also milked out of the three Vedas the letters a, u, and m, together with the words bhūr, bhuvaḥ, and svaḥ. 77. The same supreme Prajāpati also milked from each of the three Vedas one of the [three] lines of the text called sāvitṛī [or gāyatrī], beginning with the word tad.³ 81. The three great imperishable particles (bhūr, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ) preceded by om, and the gāyatrī of three lines, are to be regarded as the mouth of the Veda [or Brahma].”

SECT. II.—Origin of the Vedas according to the Vishnu and Bhāgavata Puranas, the Vṛihad Āranyaka Upanishad, the Harivaṅsa, the Mahābhārata, the Rig and Atharva Vedas; eternity of the Veda; miscellaneous statements regarding it.

In the Vishnu and Bhāgavata Puranas we find a quite different tradition regarding the origin of the Vedas, which in these works are said to have been created by the four-faced Brahma from his several mouths. Thus the Vishnu Pur. says, i. 5, 48, ff. :—Gāyatrañcha ṛichaśchaiva trivṛit-sāma-rathantaram | Agniśtōmañcha yajñānām nirmame prathamād mukhāt | yajūṃshi traishṭubhaṃ chhandasḥ stomam pañchadaśam tathā | Vṛihat sāma tathokthañcha daxiṇād asṛijad mukhāt | sāmāni jagatichhandasḥ stomam saptadaśam tathā | vairūpam atirātrañ-

*cha paśchimād asṛijad mukhāt | ekaviṁśam atharvāṇam āptor-
yāmānam evacha | Anushtubhaṁ sa vairājam uttarād asṛijad
mukhāt.* “From his first mouth Brahma formed the gayātra, the ṛik verses, the trivṛit, the sāma-rathantara. From his southern mouth he created the yajush verses, the trishtubh metre, the panchadaśa-stoma, the vṛihat-sāma, and the ukthas.
From his western mouth he formed the sāma verses, the jagatī metre, the saptadaśa-stoma, the vairūpa, and the atirātra.
From his northern mouth he framed the ekaviṁśa, the atharvan, with the anushtubh and virāj metres.”⁴

In like manner it is said, but with variations, in the Bhāgavavata Purana iii. 12, 34, and 37 ff. :—*Kadāchid dhyāyataḥ sraṣtur vedā āsamś chaturmukhāt | kathaṁ sraśyāmyakhaṁ lokān
samavetan yathā purā | . . . Ṛig-yajuh-sāmātharvākhyān vedān
pūrvādibhir mukhāiḥ | śāstram iḥyām stutistomam prāyaśchittam vyadhāt kramāt.* “Once the Vedas sprang from the four-faced creator, as he was meditating ‘how shall I create the aggregate worlds as before?’ . . . He formed from his eastern and other mouths the Vedas called Rik, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvan, together with praise, sacrifice, hymns, and expiation.” And in verse 45 it is stated that the ushnih metre issued from his hairs, the gāyatrī from his skin, the trishtubh from his flesh, the anushtubh from his tendons, the jagatī from his bones.” (*Ta-
yoshniḡ āsīl lomebhyo gayātrīcha tvacho vibhoḥ | trishtub māmsāt snuto ’nushtub jagaty asthnaḥ Prajāpateḥ.*)

Vṛihad Āranyaka.—According to the following passage of the Vṛihad Āranyaka Upanishad (p. 455 of Rōer’s Ed. and p. 179 of Trans.=Śatapatha Brahmana, p. 1064) the Vedas, as well as other śāstras are the breath of Brahma :—Sa yathā ārdrendh-āḡner abhyāhitāt pṛithag dhāmā viniścharanti evaṁ vā are ’sya mahato bhūtasya niśvasitam etad yad ṛigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo ’tharvāṅgīrasa itihāsaḥ purāṇaṁ vidyā upanishadaḥ ślokāḥ

⁴ See Wilson’s Trans. p. 42. As it is sufficient for my purpose that certain parts of the different Vedas are intended by the several terms employed in this passage,
I have left them all untranslated.

śutrāṇy anuvyākhyānāni vyākhyānāni asyaiva etāni sarvāṇi niśvasitāni. “As from a fire made of moist wood various modifications of smoke proceed, so is the breathing of this great Being the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Atharvāṅgirasas, the Itihāsas, Puranas, science, the Upanishads, verses (slokas), aphorisms, comments of different kinds—all these are his breathings.”⁵

It is curious that in this passage the Vedas appear to be classed in the same category with various other works, such as the Śūtras, from some at least of which (as we shall see further on), they are broadly distinguished by later writers, who regard the former (including the Brahmanas and Upanishads) as of superhuman origin, while this character is expressly denied to the latter, which are represented as paurusheya, or merely human compositions.

Harivanśa.—In the first section of the Harivanśa, v. 47, the creation of the Vedas by Brahmā is thus briefly alluded to:—Ṛccho yajūṁśhi sāmāni nirmame yajñasiddhaye | sādhyās tair ayajan devān ity evam anuśūsruma. “In order to the accomplishment of sacrifice, he formed the Rik, Yajush, and Sāma verses: with these the Sādhyās worshipped the gods, as we have heard.”

The following is a more particular account of the same event given in another part of the same work; Harivanśa, verse 11,516:—Tato 'srījad vai tripadām gāyatrīm vedamātaram | Akarochchaiva chaturo vedān gāyatrī-sambhavān. After framing the world, Brahmā “next created the gāyatrī of three lines, mother of the Vedas, and also the four Vedas which sprang from the gāyatrī.”

A little further on we find this expanded into the following piece of mysticism, verse 11,665, ff. :—Samāhita-manā Brahmā moxaprāptena hetunā | chandra-maṇḍala-saṁsthānāj jyotistejo mahat tadā | Praviśya hṛdayaṁ xipraṁ gāyatrīyā nayanāntare | Garbhāśya sambhavo yaścha chaturdhā puruṣhātmakeḥ | Brahma-tejomayo 'vyaktaḥ śāśvato 'tha dhruvo 'vyayaḥ | na chendriya-guṇair yukto yuktaḥ tejo-guṇena cha | chandrāmśu-vimāla-prakhyo bhrājīṣṇur varṇa-saṁsthītaḥ | Netrābhyāṁ janayad deva ṛig-vedaṁ yajushā saha | sāmavedaṅcha jīhvāgrād atharvāṅcha mūrddhataḥ | Jātamātrāstu te vedāḥ xetraṁ vindanti tattvataḥ | Tena vedatvam āpannā yasmād vindanti tatpadam | Te sṛijanti tadā vedā brahma pūrvaṁ sanātanam | Puruṣhaṁ div-yarūpābhaṁ svaiḥ svair bhāvair manobhavaḥ. “For the emancipation of the world, Brahmā, sunk in contemplation, issuing in a luminous form from the region of the moon, penetrated into the heart of Gāyatrī, entering between her eyes. From her there was then produced a quadruple being, lustrous as Brahmā, indistinct, and eternal, undecaying, devoid of bodily senses or qualities, distinguished by the attribute of brilliancy, pure as the rays of the moon, radiant, and embodied in letters. The god fashioned the Rig-veda, with the Yajush, from his eyes, the Sāma-veda from the tip of his tongue, and the Atharvan from his head. These Vedas, as soon as they are born, find a body (xetra). Hence they obtain their character of Vedas, because they find (vindanti) that abode. These Vedas then create the pre-existent eternal brahma (sacrifice or ceremonial), a being of celestial form, with their own mind-born qualities.”

I extract another passage on the same subject from a later section of the same work, verses 12,425, ff. When the Supreme Being was intent on creating the universe, Hiraṇyagarbha, or Prajāpati, issued from his mouth, and was desired to divide himself,—a process which he was in great doubt how he should effect. The text then proceeds:—Iti chintayatas tasya om ity evotthitaḥ svarāḥ | sa bhūmāv antarīxe cha nāke cha kṛitavān svanam | Tañchāivābhyasatas tasya manaḥ-sāramayam punaḥ | hṛidayād deva-devasya vashaṭkārāḥ samutthitaḥ | bhūmyanta-rīxa-nākānām bhūyaḥ svaratmakāḥ parāḥ | mahāsmṛitimayāḥ punyā mahāvyaḥṛitayo 'bhavan | chhandasām pravaraḥ devī cha-turviṃśācarā 'bhavat | Tatpadaṁ saṁsmaran divyam sāvitṛim akarot prabhuḥ | rik-sāmātharva-yajushaś' chaturo bhagavān prabhuḥ | chakāra nikhilān vedān brahmayuktena karmanā.

“While he was thus reflecting, the sound om issued from him, and resounded throughout the earth, atmosphere, and sky. While the God of gods was again and again repeating this, the essence of the mind, the vashaṭkāra proceeded from his heart. Next, the sacred vyāhritis (bhūr, bhuvah, svar) formed of the great smṛiti, the most excellent emblems of earth, atmosphere, and sky were produced. Then appeared the goddess, the most excellent of metres, with twenty-four syllables [the gāyatrī]. Reflecting on the divine text [beginning with] tad, the Lord formed the sāvitṛī. He then produced all the Vedas, the Rik, Sāman, Atharvan, and Yajush, with their prayers and rites.” (See also the passage from the Bhāg. Pur. xii. 6, 37, ff., which will be quoted in a following section.)

Mahābhārata.—The Mahābhārata in one passage speaks of the goddess Sarasvatī as the mother of the Vedas. Śānti P. verse 12,920 :—Vedānām mātaraṁ paśya matsthām devīm Sarasvatīm. “Behold Sarasvatī, mother of the Vedas, abiding in me.”

I will add here two passages, of a somewhat similar character, from the Rik and Atharva Sanhitās, though they ought, strictly speaking, to have been reserved for the next chapter.

Rig-veda.—In the 9th verse of the Purusha Sūkta (already quoted in Part First, pp. 7 and 8), the three Vedas are said to have been derived from the mystical victim Purusha. “From that universal sacrifice were produced the hymns called Rik and Sāman, the metres, and the Yajush.”

Atharva-veda.—In regard to the origin of two of the Vedas, the Atharva-veda says, xix. 54, 3 :—Kālād ṛichāḥ samabhavan yajuhḥ kālād ajāyata. “From time the Rik verses sprang; the Yajush sprang from time.”⁶

Manu.—According to the verses in Manu, xii. 49, 50, quoted in Part First of this work, p. 18, the Vedas, with the other beings and objects named along with them, constitute the second manifestation of the sattva guṇa, or pure principle; while Brahmā is placed in a higher rank, as one of the first manifestations of the same principle. The word Veda in this passage is explained by Kullūka of those “embodied deities, celebrated in the Itihāsas, who preside over the Vedas.” (Vedābhīmānīnyāścha devatā vigrahavatya itihāsa-prasiddāḥ.)

Vishnu Purana.—At the end of Section 6 of the third book of the V. P. (p. 285 of Wilson’s Trans.) we have the following assertion of the eternity of the Veda :—Iti śākhāḥ prasāṅkhyātāḥ śākhābhedās tathāiva cha | karttāraschaiva śākhānām bhedaḥetus tathoditāḥ | sarvamanvantareshveva śākhābhedāḥ samāḥ smṛitāḥ | Prājāpatyā śrutīr nityā tadvikalpās tv ime dvīja. “Thus the Śākhās, their divisions, their authors, and the cause of the division have been declared. In all the manvantaras the divisions of the Śākhās are recorded to be the same. The śruti (Veda) derived from Prajāpati (Brahmā) is eternal: these, o Brahman, are only its modifications.”

In another passage of the same book, Vishnu is identified with the Vedas. Vish. Pur. iii. 3, 19 ff. (Wilson, p. 274) :—Sa ringmayāḥ sāmamayāḥ sa chātmā sa yajurmayāḥ | ṛig-yajuh-sāmasārātmā sa evātmā śarīrīnām | sa bhidyate vedamayāḥ sa vedāṁ karoti bhedair bahubhīḥ saśākhām | śākhāpranētā sa samastāśākhā jñānasvarūpo bhagavān anantāḥ. “He is composed of the Rik, of the Sāman, of the Yajush; he is the soul. Consisting of the essence of the Rik, Yajush, and Sāman, he is the soul of embodied spirits. Formed of the Veda, he is divided; he forms the Veda and its branches (śākhās) into many divisions. Framers of the Śākhās, he is also their entirety, the infinite lord, whose essence is knowledge.”

SECT. III.—Manu's conception of the dignity and authority of the Veda, with some statements of a different tenor from him and other writers.

Manu employs the following honorific expressions in reference to the Vedas (xii. 94 ff.): — Pitṛi-deva-manushyānām vedaś chaxuḥ sanātanam | aśakyañchāprameyañcha veda-śāstram iti sthitiḥ || Yā veda-vāhyāḥ smṛitayo yāścha kāścha kudṛiṣṭayaḥ |⁷ sarvās tā nishphalāḥ pretya tamoniṣṭhā hi tāḥ smṛitāḥ || Utpadyante chyavante cha yāny ato 'nyāni kānichit | Tāny arvāk-kālikatayā⁸ nishphalāny anṛitāni cha || Chātvarṇyaṁ trayo lokāś chatvāraś chāśramāḥ pṛithak | Bhūtam bhavad bhaviṣyañcha sarvaṁ vedāt prasiddhyati || śabdaḥ sparśaścha rūpañcha raso gandhaścha pañchamaḥ | vedād eva prasiddhyanti prasūti-guṇa-karmataḥ || Bibhartti⁹ sarva-bhūtāni veda-śāstraṁ sanātanam | Tasmād etat param manye yaj jantor asya sādhanam || Saināpatyañcha rājyañcha daṇḍa-netṛitvam eva cha | sarva-lokādhipatyañcha veda-śāstra-vid arhati || Yathā jāta-balo vahnir dahyaty ādrān api drumān | tathā dahati vedajñāḥ karmajaṁ doṣham ātmanaḥ | veda-śāstrārtha-tattvajño yatra tatrāśrame vasan | Ihaiva loke tiṣṭhan sa brahmabhūyāya kalpate. “The Veda is the eternal eye of the patriarchs, of gods, and of men; it is beyond human power and comprehension; this is a certain conclusion. Whatever traditions are apart from the Veda, and all heretical views, are fruitless in the next world, for they are declared to be founded on darkness. All other [books] external to the Veda, which arise and pass away, are worthless and false from their recentness of date. The system of the four castes, the three worlds, the four states of life, all that has been, now is, or shall be, is made manifest by the Veda. The objects of touch and taste, sound, form, and odour, as the fifth, are made known by the Veda, together with their products, qualities, and the actions they occasion. The eternal Veda supports all beings: hence I regard it as the principal instrument of well-being to this creature, man. Command of armies, royal authority, the administration of criminal justice, and the sovereignty of all worlds, he alone deserves who knows the Veda. As fire, when it has acquired force, burns up even green trees, so he who knows the Veda consumes the taint of his soul which has been contracted from works. He who comprehends the essential meaning of the Veda, in whatever order of life he may be, is prepared for absorption into Brahma, even while abiding in this lower world."

The following are some further miscellaneous passages of the same tenor, scattered throughout the Institutes (Manu ii. 10 ff.): —Śrutistu vedo vijñeyo dharmasāstrantu vai smṛitiḥ | te sarvārtheshv amīmāṃsyē tābhyāṃ dharmo hi nirbahau | 11. Yo 'vamanyeta te māle hetu-sāstrāśrayād dvijaḥ | sa sādhubhir vahishkāryyo nāstiko vedanindakaḥ | 13. . . . Dharmam jijnāsamānānam pramānam paramam śrutih. "By śruti is meant the Veda, and by smṛiti the institutes of law: the contents of these are not to be questioned by reason, since from them [a knowledge of] duty has shone forth. The Brahman who, relying on rationalistic treatises,¹⁰ shall condemn these two primary sources of knowledge, must be excommunicated by the virtuous as a sceptic and reviler of the Vedas. . . . 13. To those who are seeking a knowledge of duty, the śruti is the supreme authority."

In the following passage, the necessity of a knowledge of Brahma is asserted, though the practice of ritual observances is also inculcated (vi. 82, ff.):—Dhyānikaṃ sarvaṃ evaitad yad etad abhiśabditaṃ | na hy anadhyātma-vit kaśchit kriyāphalam upāśnute | adhiyajñam brahma japed ādhidaivikam eva cha | ādhyatmikaṅcha satatam vedāntābhikītaṅcha yat | Idam śaraṇam ajñānām idam eva vijānatām | idam anvichchhatām svargam idam ānantyam ichchhatām. "All this which has been now declared is dependant on devout meditation: no one who is ignorant of the supreme spirit can reap the fruit of ceremonial acts. Let a man repeat texts relating to sacrifice, texts relating to deities, texts relating to the supreme spirit, and whatever is declared in the Vedānta. This [Veda] is the refuge of the ignorant, as well as of the understanding; it is the refuge of those who are seeking after paradise, as well as of those who are desiring infinity."

The following text breathes a moral spirit, by representing purity of life as essential to the reception of benefit from religious observances (ii. 97):—Vedās tyāgāścha yajñāścha niyamāścha tapāmsi cha | na vipraduṣṭa-bhāvasya siddhiṃ gachhanti karchichit. "The Vedas, almsgiving, sacrifices, observances, austerities, are ineffectual to a man of depraved disposition."

The doctrine which may be drawn from the following lines does not seem so favourable to morality (xi. 261, ff.):—Hatvā lokān apīmāñs trīn aśnann api yatastataḥ | Rīgvedam dhārayan vipro nainah prāpnoti kīñchana | Rīksamhitām trīr abhyasya yajushām vā samāhitah | sāmnam vā sarahasyānām sarvapāpaiḥ pramuchyate | yathā mahā-hradam prāpya xiptam loṣṭam vinaśyati | tathā duścharitaṃ sarvaṃ vede trivṛiti majjati. "A Brahman who should destroy these three worlds, and eat food received from any quarter whatever, would incur no guilt if he retained in his memory the [whole] Rig-veda. Repeating thrice with intent mind the sanhitā of the Rik, or the Yajush, or the Sāman, with the Upanishads, he is freed from all his sins. Just as a clod thrown into a great lake is dissolved when it touches the water, so does all sin sink in the triple Veda."

Considering the sacredness ascribed in the preceding passages to all the Vedas, the epithet applied to the Sāma-veda in the second of the following verses is remarkable (Manu iv. 123, ff.): Sāmadhvanāv ṛigyajushī nādhyīta kadāchana | vedasyādhītya vā'py antam āran yakam adhītya cha | Rīgvedo devadāivatyo yajurvedastu mānushah | Sāmavedah smṛitah pitryas tasmāt tasyāśuchīr dhvaniḥ. "Let no one read the Rik or the Yajush while the Sāman is sounding in his ears, or after he has read the conclusion of the Veda (i.e. the Vedānta) or an Āran yakam. The Rīg-veda has the gods for its deities, the Yajur-veda has men for its objects, the Sāma-veda has the pitris for its divinities, wherefore its sound is impure."

The scholiast Kullūka, however, will not allow that the Sāma-veda can be "really impure." "It has," he says, "only a semblance of impurity" (tasmāt tasya āśuchīr iva dhvaniḥ | na tv āśuchīr eva). In this remark he evinces the tendency, incident to many systematic theologians, to ignore all those features of the sacred text on which they are commenting which are at variance with their theories regarding its absolute perfection. As it was the opinion of his age that the Veda was eternal and divine, it was, he considered, impossible that impurity or any species of fault could be predicated of any of its parts; and every expression, even of the highest authorities, which contradicted this opinion, had to be explained away. I am not in a position to state how this notion of impurity came to be attached to the Sāma-veda. The passage perhaps proceeded from the adherents of some particular Vedic school adverse to the Sāma-veda; but its substance being found recorded in some earlier work, it was deemed of sufficient authority to find a place in the miscellaneous collection of precepts,—gathered no doubt from different quarters, and perhaps not always strictly con-

Vishnu Purana.—The following passage from the Vishnu Purana, at the close, ascribes the same character of impurity to the Sāma-veda, though on different grounds, Vish. Pur. ii. 11, 5 (Wilson, p. 235):—Yā tu śaktiḥ parā Vishnor ṛig-yajuh-sāma-sañjñitā | saishā trayī tapaty aṁho jagataścha hinasti yat | saiva Vishnuḥ sthītaḥ sthityāṁ jagataḥ pālanodyataḥ | ṛig-yajuh-sāma-bhūto 'ntaḥ savitur dvija tishṭhati | māsi māsi ravir yo yas tatra tatra hi sā parā | trayīmayī Vishnu-śaktir avasthānaṁ karoti vai | Richas tapanti pūrvāhne madhyāhne 'tha yajūṁshy atha | vṛihad-rathantarādīni sāmāny ahaṇaḥ xaye ravau | angam eshā trayī Vishnor ṛig-yajuh-sāma-sañjñitā | Vishnu-śaktir avasthānam māsādītye karoti sā | na kevalaṁ ravau śaktir vaiśṅavī sā trayīmayī | Brahmā 'tha Puruṣo Rudras trayam etat trayīmayam | sargādāv ṛiṅmayo Brahmā sthītau Vishnur yajurmayah | Rudraḥ sāmamayo 'ntāya tasmāt tasyāśuchir dhvaniḥ. “The supreme energy of Vishnu, called the Rik, Yajush, and Sāman—this triad burns up sin and all things injurious to the world. During the continuance of the world, this triad exists as Vishnu, who is occupied in the preservation of the universe, and in the form of the Rik, Yajush, and Sāman, abides within the sun. That supreme energy of Vishnu, consisting of the triple Veda, dwells in the particular form of the sun, which presides over each month. The Rik verses shine in the morning sun, the Yajush verses in his meridian beams, and the Vrihad rathantara and other Sāma verses in his declining rays. This triple Veda is the body of Vishnu, and this his energy abides in the monthly sun. But this energy of Vishnu, formed of the triple Veda, does not reside in the sun alone; Brahmā, Puruṣa (Vishnu), and Rudra also constitute a triad formed of the triple Veda. At the creation, Brahmā is formed of the Rig-veda; during the continuance of the universe, Vishnu is composed of the Yajur-veda; and for the destruction of the worlds, Rudra is made up of the Sāma-veda; hence the sound of this Veda is impure.”

Vāyu Purana.—Other passages also may be found in works not reputed to be heretical, in which the Vedas, or particular parts of them, are not spoken of with the same degree of respect as they are by Manu. Thus the Vāyu Purana gives precedence to the Puranas over the Vedas in the order of creation (i. 56¹¹):—Prathamam sarva-sāstrānām Purānām Brahmaṇā smṛitam | anantaraṅcha vahtrebhyo vedās tasya vinissritāḥ. “First of all the Sastras, the Purana was uttered by Brahmā. Subsequently the Vedas issued from his mouths.”

The same Purana says further on in the same section (p. 50 of Dr. Aufrecht's Catalogue):—Yo vidyāch chaturō vedān sāṅgopanishado dvijaḥ | na chet purānām saṁvidyād naiva sa syād vichaxanaḥ | Itihāsa-purānābhyām vedān samupavṛimhayet | vibhety alpaśrutād vedo mām ayaṁ praharishyati. “He who knows the four Vedas, with their supplements and Upanishads, is not really learned, unless he know also the Puranas. Let a man, therefore, complete the Vedas by adding the Itihasas and Puranas. The Veda is afraid of a man of little learning, lest he should treat it injuriously.”

Brahma-vaivartta Purana.—The Brahma-vaivartta Purana asserts in a yet more audacious manner its own superiority to the Veda (i. 48 ff.):—Bhavagan yat tvayā pṛishṭam jñātam sarvam abhīpsitam | sārabhūtam purāneshu Brahma-vaivarttam uttamam | Purānopapurānānām vedānām bhrama-bhañjanam. “That about which, venerable sage, you have inquired, is all known by me, the essence of the Puranas, the pre-eminent Brahma-vaivartta, which refutes the errors of the Puranas and Upapuranas, and of the Vedas.” (Aufrecht's Cat. p. 21.)

In the following passage also, from the commencement of the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, the Vedic hymns (though a divine origin, would no doubt be allowed to them¹²) are at all events depreciated, by being classed among other works as part of the inferior science, in contrast to the Brahma-vidyā or knowledge of Brahma, the highest of all knowledge, which is expressly ascribed to Brahmā as its author:—1. *Brahmā devānām prathamakṣ sambabhūva viśvasya karttā bhuvanasya goptā | sa brahmanvidyām sarvanvidyāpratiṣṭhām Atharvāya jyesṭhaputrāya prāha | 2. He revealed to his eldest son Atharvan, the science of Brahmā, the support of all knowledge. 2. Atharvan of old declared to Angis this science, which Brahmā had unfolded to him; and Angis, in turn, explained it to Satyavāha, descendant of Bharadvāja, who delivered this traditional lore [or the higher and lower science] to Angiras. 3. Śaunaka, the great householder, approaching Angiras in due form, inquired, ‘What is that, O venerable sage, through the knowledge of which all this [universe] becomes known?’ 4. [Angiras] answered, ‘Two sciences are to be known—this is what the sages acquainted with Brahma declare—the superior and the inferior. 5. The inferior [consists of] the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Atharva-veda, accentuation, ritual,

From him came the Rik verses, the Sāman, the Yajush verses, initiatory rites, all oblations, sacrifices, and gifts, the year, the sacrificer, and the worlds where the moon and sun purify.”

grammar, commentary, prosody, and astronomy. The superior science is that by which the imperishable is comprehended.”

It is to be remarked that in this passage (verse 5) as in that already quoted above (p. 7) from the Vṛihad Āryanyaka Upanishad, the most essential parts of the Vedas, the sanhitās, are classed in the same category with the Kalpa or ceremonial institutes, and other works, from which they are separated by a broad line of demarcation in the works of later writers.

The following passage from the Kaṭha Upanishad (ii. 23) is of a somewhat similar tenor (p. 107 of Roër's ed. and p. 106 of Eng. trans.):—Nāyam ātmā pravachanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yam evaiśha vṛinute tena labhyas tasyaiśha ātmā vṛinute tanūṁ svām. “This soul is not to be attained by tradition, nor by understanding, nor by much scripture. He is attainable by him whom he chooses. The soul chooses that man's body as his own.”

The scholiast interprets thus the first part of this text:—Yadyapi durvijñeyo 'yam ātmā tathāpy upāyena suvijñeya eva ity āha nāyam ātmā pravachanena aneka-veda-svīkaranena labhyo jñeyo nāpi medhayā granthārtha-dhāranā-śaktyā na bahunā śrutena kevalena | kena tarhi labhya ity uchyate. “Although this soul is difficult to know, still it may easily be known by the use of proper means. This is what [the author] proceeds to say. This soul is not to be attained, known, by tradition, by the acknowledgment of many Vedas; nor by understanding, by the power of recollecting the contents of books; nor by much scripture alone. By what, then, is it to be attained? This he declares.”

It is not necessary to follow the scholiast into the Vedantic explanation of the rest of the passage.¹³

SECT. IV.—Division of the Vedas, according to the Vishnu, Vāyu, and Bhāgavata Puranas, and the Mahābhārata.

The Vishnu Purana gives the following account of the division of the Veda, described as having been originally but one, into four parts, iii. 2, 18 (see Wilson's Trans. p. 270):—Kṛite yuge param̄ jñānam Kapilādi-svarūpa-dhṛik | dadāti sarva-bhūtānām sarva-bhūtaḥite rataḥ | chakravartti-svarūpena Tretāyām api sa prabhuḥ | Dusṭānām nigrāhaṁ kurvan paripāti jagat-trayam | Vedam ekaṁ chaturbhedaṁ kṛitvā śākhā-śatair vibhuḥ | karoti bahulam bhūyo Vedavyāsa-svarūpa-dhṛik | vedāms tu dvāpare vyasya, etc. “In the Krita age, Vishnu, devoted to the welfare of all creatures, assumes the form of Kapila and others to confer upon them the highest knowledge. In the Tretā age, the Supreme Lord, in the form of a universal potentate, represses the violence of the wicked, and protects the three worlds. Assuming the form of Vyāsa, the all-pervading Being repeatedly divides the single Veda into four parts, and multiplies it by distributing it into hundreds of śākhās. Having thus divided the Vedas in the Dvāpara age,” etc.

This is repeated more at length in the following section (Vish. Pur. iii. 3, 4 ff.):—Veda-drumasya Maitreya śākhābhedaik sahasraśaḥ | na śakyo vistaro vaktuṁ saṁxepena sṛinushva tam | Dvāpare Dvāpare Vishṇur Vyāsarūpī mahāmune | Vedam eham sa bahudhā kurute jagato hitaḥ | vīryam tejo balañchālpam manushyānām avexya vai | hitāya sarvabhūtānām veda-bhedān karoti saḥ | yayā sa kurute tanvā vedam ekaṁ pṛithak prabhuḥ | Vedavyāsābhīdhūnā tu sā mūrttir Madhuvidvishaḥ | . . . Ashtāvīṣāti-kṛitvo vai vedā vyastā maharshibhikḥ | Vairasvate 'ntare tasmin Dvāpareshu punaḥ punaḥ. “It is not possible, Maitreya, to describe in detail the tree of the Vedas with its thousand branches (śākhās); but listen to a summary. A friend to the world, Vishnu, in the form of Vyāsa, divides the single Veda into many parts. He does so for the good of all creatures, because he perceives the vigour, energy, and strength of men to be now but limited. Vedavyāsa, in whose person he performs this division, is an impersonation of the enemy of Madhu (Vishnu). . . . Eight-and-twenty times in the Dvāpara ages of this Vaivasvata manvantara¹⁴ have the Vedas been divided by great sages." These sages are then enumerated, and Krishna Dvaipayana¹⁵ is the twenty-eighth.

The subject is resumed at the beginning of the next section (Vish. Pur. iii. 4, 1 ff.) :—Ādyo vedaś chatuspādaḥ śata-sāhasra-sammitaḥ | Tato daśa-guṇaḥ kṛtsno yajño 'yaṁ sarva-kāmadhuk | Tato 'tra matsuto Vyāso 'shṭāvīmśatitame 'ntare | vedam ekam chatuspādām chaturdhā vyabhajat prabhuḥ | yathā tu tena vai vyastā Vedavyāsena dhīmatā | Vedās tathā samastais tair vyastā Vyāsais tathā mayā | tad anenaiva vedānām śākhābhedaṁ dvijottama | chaturyugeshu rachitān samasteshv avadhāraya | Krishna-dvaipāyanaṁ Vyāsam viddhi Nārāyaṇam prabhūm | ko 'nyo hi bhūvi Maitreya Mahābhārata-kṛd bhavet | Tena vyastā yathā Vedā matputrena mahātmanā | Dvāpare hy atra Maitreya tad me śṛiṇu yathārthataḥ | Brahmanā chodito Vyāso vedān vyastum prachakrame | Atha śishyān sa jagrāha chaturō veda-pāragān | Ṛigveda-śrāvakam Paīlaṁ jagrāha sa mahāmuniḥ | Vaiśampāyana-nāmānaṁ Yajurvedasya chāgrahīt | Jaiminiṁ sāmavedasya tathavātharvaveda-vit | Sumantus tasya śishyo 'bhūd Vedavyāsasya dhīmataḥ | Romakarshana-nāmānam mahābuddhīm mahāmuniṁ | Sūtaṁ jagrāha śishyaṁ sa itihāsa-purāṇayoh. "The original Veda, four-footed [or in four quarters] consisted of a hundred thousand verses. From it arose the entire system of sacrifice, of ten descriptions [or of tenfold

¹⁵ Lassen (Ind. Ant. i. 629, note) remarks :—"Vyasa signifies arrangement, and this signification had still retained its place in the recollection of the ancient recorders of the legend, who have formed from his name an irregular perfect, viz. vivyaśa." Lassen refers to two passages of the Mahābhārata in which the name is explained, viz. (i. 2417), Vivyaśa vedān yasmāt sa tasmād Vyāsa iti smṛitaḥ. "He is called Vyasa because he divided the Veda." And (i. 4236) Yo vyasya Vedāṁś chaturas tapasā bhagavān rishih | Loke vyāsatvam āpede kārshnyat kṛṣṇatvam eva cha. efficacy?], and yielding all the objects of desire. Subsequently, in the twenty-eighth period, my son (it is Parāśara who is the speaker), the mighty Vyāsa divided into four parts the one four-quartered Veda. In the same way as the Vedas were divided by the wise Vyāsa, so had they been divided by all the [preceding] Vyāsas, including myself. And know that the sākḥā divisions [formed] by him [were the same as those] formed in all the periods of four yugas. Learn, too, that Krishna Dvaipāyana Vyāsa was the lord Nārāyana, for who else on earth could have composed the Mahābhārata? Hear now correctly how the Vedas were divided by him, my great-souled son, in this Dvāpara age. When, commanded by Brahmā, Vyāsa undertook to divide the Vedas, he took four disciples who had read through those books. The great muni took Paila as teacher of the Rik, Vaiśampāyana of the Yajush, and Jaimini of the Sāman, while Śūmantu, skilled in the Atharvaveda, was also his disciple. He took, too, as his pupil for the Itihāsas and Puranas the great and intelligent muni, Sūta, called Romaharshana.”

Vāyu Purana.—In the same way, and partly in the same words, the Vāyu Purana (Section lx.) represents the Vedas to have been divided in the Dvāpara age. It first describes how this was done by Manu in the Svāyambhuva, or first Manvantara, and then recounts how Vyāsa performed the same task in the existing seventh, or Vaivasvata Manvantara; and, no doubt, also in the Dvāpara age, though this is not expressly stated in regard to Vyāsa.

- The following is an extract from this passage (as given in Dr. Aufrecht's Catalogue, p. 54):—Dvāpare tu purāvṛitte Manoḥ svāyambhuve 'ntare | Brahmā Manum uvāchedam vedaṁ vyasya mahāmate | Parivṛittāṁ yugaṁ tāta svalpavīryā dvijātayaḥ | saṁvṛittā yugadoshena sarvañchaiva yathākramam | bhrashta-mānaṁ yāgavaśād alpaśishtaṁ hi drīśyate | Daśa-sāhasra-bhāgena hy avasīṣṭam kṛitād idam | vīryaṁ tejo balañchālpaṁ sarvañchaiva pranaśyati | vede vedā hi kāryyāḥ syur mā bhūd veda-vināśanam | vede nāśam anuprāpte yajño nāśaṁ gamishyati |

 Svāyambhuva Manvantara, Brahmā said to Manu, ‘ Divide the Veda, O sage. The age is changed ; through its baneful influence the Brahmans have become feeble, and from the same cause everything has been gradually corrupted, so that little [good] is seen remaining. Only a ten-thousandth part is now left of the vigour, fire, and energy of the Kṛita age, and everything declines. Vedas must be made out of the one Veda, lest the Veda be destroyed. The destruction of the Veda would involve the destruction of sacrifice ; that again would occasion the annihilation of the gods, and then everything would go to ruin.
 The primeval Veda was four-footed [or consisted of four quarters], and extended to one hundred thousand verses, while sacrifice was of ten sorts [or tenfold efficacy], and yielded every object of desire.’ Being thus addressed, Manu, the lord, devoted to the good of the world, replied, ‘ Be it so,’ and in conformity with the command of Brahmā, divided the one four-quartered Veda into four parts.¹⁶ I shall, therefore, narrate to you the division of the Veda in the existing Manvantara ; from which present division you, virtuous sages, can understand those remote arrangements of the same kind which were made in past Manvantaras. In this Yuga, the victorious son of Parāśara, who is called Dvaipāyana, and is celebrated as a portion of Vishnu, has been made the Vyāsa. In this [Yuga?], he, being commanded by Brahmā, began to divide the Vedas. For this purpose, he took four pupils, Jaimini, Sumantu, Vaiśampāyana, and Paila, and, as a fifth, Lomaharshana" [for the Puranas and Itihāsas, etc.]

Bhāgavata Purana.—It is in its Third Book, where the different Manvantaras are described, that the Vishnu Purana gives an account of the division of the Vedas. In the book of the Bhāgavata Purana, where the Manvantaras are enumerated, there is no corresponding allusion to the division of the Vedas. Towards the close of the Purana, however, in the sixth section of the twelfth book (verses 37 ff.) there is to be found what Prof. Wilson (Vish. Pur. Pref. p. xxvii.) calls "a rather awkwardly introduced description of the arrangement of the Vedas and Puranas by Vyāsa," which is no doubt brought in here, to supply the omission which the original author, or some subsequent editor, had discovered to exist in the earlier part of the work.

The passage (as given in the Bombay lithographed edition) is as follows :—Sūta uvācha | samāhitātmano brahman Brahmanah parameshthinaḥ | hṛid-ākāśād abhūd nādo vṛttirodhād vibhāvyaṭe | yad-upāsanayā brahman yogino malam ātmanah | dravya-kriyā-kārahākhyāṁ dhṛtva yānty apanurbhavam | Tato 'bhūt trivṛd oṁkāro yo 'vyakta-prabhavaḥ svarāt | yat talliṅgam Bhagavato brahmanah paramātmanah | sṛinoti ya imaṁ sphoṭaṁ suptaśrotre cha śūnyadṛiḥ | yena vāg vyajate yasya vyaktir ākāśe ātmanah | svadhāmano brahmanah sākād vāchakah paramātmanah | sa-sarva-mantropanishad-veda-vījāṁ sanātanam | tasya hyāsaṁs trayo varṇā a-kārādya Bhṛigūdvaḥ | dhāryante yaḥ trayo bhāxā gunā nāmārtha-vṛttayaḥ | tato 'xara-samāmnāyam asṛijad bhagavān ajaḥ | Antasthoshma-svara-sparśa-hrasva-dīrghādi-laxanam | tenāsau chaturō vedāṁs chāturbhir vadanair vibhuḥ | sa-vyāhṛitikān soṁkārāmś chāturhotra-rivaxayā | putrān adhyā-

Brahma’s heart, when he was plunged in meditation, there issued a sound, which is perceived by the devout when they close their organs of sense. By adoring this sound, devotees destroy the soul’s threefold taint, extrinsic, inherent, and superhuman,¹⁷ and become exempt from future birth. From this sound sprang the triple omkāra, self-resplendent, unperceived in its production, the emblem of the divine Brahma, the supreme spirit. He (the supreme spirit) hears this sound (sphoṭa), though his ears be closed and his senses inactive,—(this sphoṭa or omkāra ?) through which speech is revealed, and of which a manifestation is made in the firmament of the soul.¹⁸ This [omkāra] is the sensible*

exponent of Brahma, the self-sustained, the supreme spirit; and it is the eternal seed of the Vedas, including all the Mantras and Upanishads. In this [oṃkāra] there were, o descendant of Bhrigu, three letters, A and the rest, by which the three conditions, viz. the [three] qualities, the [three] names, the [three] objects, the [three] states¹⁹ are maintained. From these three letters the divine and unborn being created the various letters of the alphabet, distinguished as inner (y, r, l, v), ushmas (ś, sh, s, h), vowels, long and short, and consonants. With this [alphabet] the omnipresent Being, desiring to reveal the functions of the four classes of priests, [created] from his four mouths the four Vedas with the three sacred syllables (vyāhritis) and the oṃkāra. These he taught to his sons, the brahmarshis, skilled in sacred lore; and these teachers of duty, in turn declared them to their sons. The Vedas were thus received by each succeeding generation of devout pupils throughout the four yugas, from their predecessors, and were divided by great sages at the beginning of the Dvāpara.²⁰ The Brahmarshis, impelled by Achyuta, who resided in their hearts, divided the Vedas, because they perceived that men had declined in age, in virtue, and in understanding. In this Manvantara also,²¹ the divine and omnipresent Being, the author of the eva tadvat ko'sāv oṃkāras taṃ viśinashṭi sārāhena yena vūg brihatī vyajyate yasya cha hridayākāśe ātmanaḥ sakāśād vyaktir abhivyaktiḥ. The word sphaṭa will be explained below, in Section VII.

universe, being supplicated by Brahméśa and the other guardians of the world, to maintain righteousness, became partially incarnate as the son of Paráśara and Satyavati, and divided the Veda into four parts. Selecting aggregates of Rik, Atharva, Yajush, and Sāma verses, and arranging them in sections (vargas), he formed four sanhitās (collections) of the hymns, as gems [of the same description are gathered together in separate heaps]. Having summoned four disciples, the sage gave to each of them one of these sanhitās. To Paila he declared the first sanhitā, called that of the Bahvṛichas; to Vaiśampāyana the assemblage of Yajush verses, called Nigada; to Jaimini the Chhandoga collection of Sāma verses; and to his pupil, Sumantu, the Atharvangirasī.”

The Bhāgavata Purana, however, is not consistent in the account which it gives of the division of the Vedas. In a passage already quoted in the First Part of this work, p. 48, it speaks of that division as having been the work of the monarch Purūravas, and as having taken place in the beginning of the Tretā age. From the importance of this text I will extract it here again at greater length.

The celestial nymph Ūrvaśī, the Purana tells us, had been doomed, in consequence of a curse, to take up her abode upon earth. She there fell in love with King Purūravas, the report of whose manly beauty had touched her heart, even before she had been banished from paradise. After spending many happy days in the society of her lover, she forsook him in consequence of his having infringed one of the conditions of their cohabitation, and Purūravas was in consequence rendered very miserable. He at length, however, obtained a renewal of their intercourse, and she finally recommended him to worship the Gandharvas, who would then re-unite her to him indissolubly.

The Purana then proceeds (ix. 14, 43 ff.):—Tasya saṁstu-

ceding verses] generally described the manner in which the Vedas were divided, [the author] now states [as follows], with the view of determining particularly [what was done] in the Vaivasvata Manvantara.”

"The Gandharvas, gratified by his praises, gave him a platter containing fire. This he [at first] supposed to be Ūrvaśī, but became aware [of his mistake], as he wandered in the wood. Having placed the platter in the forest, Purūravas went home; and as he was meditating in the night, after the Tretā age had commenced, the triple Veda appeared before his mind.²² Returning to the spot where he had placed the platter, he beheld an aśvattha tree springing out of a śamī tree, and formed from it two pieces of wood. Longing to attain the world where Ūrvaśī dwelt, he imagined to himself, according to the sacred text, Ūrvaśī as the lower and himself as the upper piece of wood, and their offspring as lying between the two. Fire was generated from the friction, and, according to the threefold science [Veda], was under its triple form, recognised by the king as his son. With this seeking to attain the heaven of Ūrvaśī, he worshipped the divine Hari, the lord of sacrifice, Adhxoja, formed of the substance of all the gods. There was formerly only one Veda, the sacred monosyllable om, the essence of all speech; only one god, Nārāyana; only one Agni, and [one] caste. From Purūravas came the triple Veda in the beginning of the Tretā age.

²² Karma-bodhakam vedatrayaṁ prādurbhūt. "The three Vedas, ordainers of rites, were manifested to him," as the scholiast explains.

Through Agni, his son, the king attained the heaven of the Gandharvas.”²³

On the close of this passage the commentator remarks :—Nano anādir veda-traya-bodhito brāhmaṇādīnām Indrādyaneka-deva-yajanena svarga-prāpti-hetuḥ karma-mārgaḥ kathaṁ sādīr iva var-nyate | Tatrāha ‘eka eva’ iti dvābhyām | Purā kṛita-yuge sarva-vāṅg-mayaḥ sarvāsām vāchām vīja-bhūtaḥ pranava eka eva vedaḥ | Devāscha Nārāyana eka eva | Agniścha eka eva laukikaḥ | Var-ṇāscha eka eva haṁso nāma | Vedatrayī tu Purūravasaḥ sakāśād āsīt . . . Ayam bhūvaḥ | kṛita-yuge sattva-pradhānāḥ prāyaśaḥ sarve ‘pi dhyānanishṭhāḥ | rajaḥ-pradhāne tu Tretā-yuge vedādivibhāgena karmamārgāḥ prakāṣaḥ babhūva ityarthah. “How is it that the eternal method of works, which is pointed out by the three Vedas, and through which Brahmans and others, by worshipping Indra and many other gods, attain to paradise, is spoken of [in the preceding verses] as if it had a beginning in time? He [the author of the Purana] answers this in these two verses. Formerly, i.e. in the Kṛita age, there was only one Veda, the sacred monosyllable om, the essence of all words, i.e. that which is the seed of all words; and there was only one god, Nārāyana; only one fire, that for common uses; and only one caste, the Hansa. But the triple Veda came from Purūravas. . . . The meaning is this: in the Kṛita age the quality of goodness predominated in men, who were almost all absorbed in meditation. But in the Tretā age, when passion (rajas) prevailed, the method of works was manifested by the division of the Vedas.”²⁴ mated, a different account of the division of the Vedas from that contained in the text previously adduced from the same work, and in the citations from the Vishnu and Vāyu Puranas. The one set of passages speak of the Veda as having been divided by Vyāsa into four parts in the Dvāpara age; while the text last cited speaks of the triple Veda as having originated with Purūravas in the Tretā age; and evidently belonged to a different tradition from the former three. The legend which speaks of three Vedas is likely to be more ancient than that which speaks of four, as it was not till a comparatively late date that the Atharva asserted its right to be ranked with the three others as a fourth Veda. This earlier tradition, however, appears to have had its origin partly in etymological considerations. The word Tretā, though designating the second Yuga, means a triad, and seems to have been suggested to the writer's mind by the triple fire mentioned in the legend.

This last quoted passage of the Bhāgavata gives, as I have inti-

Mahābhārata.—The following passage from the Mahābhārata, Sāntiparva (verses 13,088 ff.), agrees partially in tenor with the second passage from the Bhāgavata, but is silent regarding Purūravas:—Idaṁ kṛitayugaṁ nāma kālaḥ śreṣṭhaḥ pravarttitaḥ | Ahimṣyā yajñapaśavo yuge 'smin na tad anyathā || Chatuspāt śakalo dharmo bhaviṣhyaty atra vai surāḥ | Tatas Tretā yugaṁ nāma trayī yatra bhaviṣhyati || Proxītā yajñapaśavo badhaṁ prāpsyanti vai makhe²⁵ | Yatra pādaś chaturtho vai dharmasya na bhaviṣhyati || Tato vai dvāparaṁ nāma miśraḥ kālo bhaviṣhyati. “This present Kṛita age is the best of all the yugas; in it it is unlawful to slay any animals for sacrifice; in this age righteousness shall consist of all its four portions and be entire. Then shall follow the Tretā age, in which the triple

Veda shall arise, and animals fit for sacrifice shall be slaughtered as oblations. In that age the fourth part of righteousness shall be wanting. Next shall succeed the Dvāpara, a mixed period.”

The M. Bh. (Śāntip. 13,475) relates that two Asuras, who beheld Brahmā creating the Vedas, suddenly snatched them up and ran off. Brahmā laments their loss, exclaiming, Vedo me paramam chaxur vedo me paramam balam | . . . Vedān ṛite hi kiṁ kuryām lokānām sṛishtim uttamām. “The Veda is my principal eye; the Veda is my principal strength. . . . What shall I do without the Vedas, the most excellent creation in the universe?” They were, however, recovered and restored to Brahmā (v. 13,506 ff.)

Vishnu-purāna.—The following verse, Vish. Pur. iii. 2, 12 (Wilson, p. 269), refers to the periodical disappearance of the Vedas:—Chaturyugānte vedānām jāyate kaliviplavaḥ | pravartayanti tān etya bhūvi saptarshayo divaḥ. “At the end of the four ages (yugas) the disappearance of the Vedas, incident to the kali, takes place. The seven rishis come from heaven to earth, and again give them currency.” (Compare M. Bh. Śāntip. 7,660, which will be quoted further on.)

The Vishnu Purana, iii. 5, 2 ff. (Wilson, p. 279 ff.), gives the following legend regarding the way in which the Yajur-veda came to be divided into two schools, the black and the white:—Yājñavalkyas tu tasyābhūd Brahmarātasuto dvija | Śishyah parama-dharmajño guru-vṛitti-paraḥ sadā | Rishir yo 'dya mahāmeruṁ samāje nāgamishyati | Tasya vai sapta-rātrantu brahma-hatyā bhavishyati | Pūrvam eva muṇi-ganaiḥ samayo 'bhūt kṛito dvija | Vaiśampāyana ekas tu taṁ vyatikrāntavāms tadā | Svaśrīyam bālakaṁ so 'tha padā sṛishtam aghātayat |

“Yājñavalkya, son of Brahmarāti, was his [Vaiśampāyana's] disciple, eminently versed in duty, and obedient to his teacher. An agreement had formerly been made by the Munis that any one of their number who should fail to attend at an assembly on Mount Meru on a certain day should incur the guilt of Brahmanicide during [within?] a period of seven nights. Vaiśampāyana was the only person who infringed this agreement, and he in consequence occasioned the death of his sister's child by touching it with his foot. He then desired all his disciples to perform in his behalf an expiation which should take away his guilt, and forbade any hesitation. Yājñavalkya then said to him, 'Reverend sir, what is the necessity for these faint and feeble Brahmins? I will perform the expiation.' The wise teacher, incensed, replied to Yājñavalkya, 'Contemner of Brahmans, give up all that thou hast learnt from me; I have no need of a disobedient disciple, who, like thee, stigmatizes these eminent Brahmans as feeble.' Yājñavalkya rejoined, 'It was from devotion [to thee] that I said what I did; but I, too, have done with thee: here is all that I have learnt from thee.' Having spoken, he vomited forth the identical Yajush texts tainted with blood, and giving them to his master, he departed at his will. [The other pupils] having then become transformed into partridges (tittiri), picked up the Yajush texts, and were thence called Taittirīyas. And those who had by their teacher's command performed the expiation, were from this performance (charana) called Charakādhvaryus. Yājñavalkya then, who was habituated to the exercise of suppressing his breath, devoutly hymned the sun, desiring to obtain Yajush texts . . . [I pass over the hymn.] Thus celebrated with these and other praises, the sun assumed the form of a horse, and said, 'Ask whatever boon thou desirest.' Yājñavalkya then, prostrating himself before the lord of day, replied, 'Give me such Yajush texts as my teacher does not possess.' Thus supplicated, the sun gave him the Yajush texts called Ayātayāma, which were not known to his master. Those by whom these texts were studied were called Vājins, because the sun (when he gave them) assumed the shape of a horse (vāji)."

I quote also the parallel text from the Vāyu Purana, as it exhibits some slight variations from the preceding, (Vāyu Pur. Aufr. Cat. p. 55):—Kāryam āsīd ṛishīnāñcha kiñchid brāhmaṇa-sattamāḥ | Meru-ṛishṭhaṃ samāsādya tais tadā 'stvitī mantritam | Yo no 'tra sapta-rātreṇa nāgachhed dvija-sattamāḥ | sa kuryād brahma-badhyāṃ vai samayo naḥ prakīrttitaḥ | Tatas te saganāḥ sarve Vaiśampāyana-varjitaḥ | Prayayuh saptarātreṇa yatra sandhiḥ kṛito 'bhavat | Brāhmaṇānāntu vachanād brahma-badhyāṃ chakāra saḥ | Śishyān atha samānīya sa Vaiśampāyano 'bravīt | Brahma-badhyāṃ charadhvaṃ vai mathṛite dvijah-sattamāḥ | sarve yūyaṃ samāgamyā brūta me taddhitaṃ

They all in consequence resorted to the appointed place for seven nights along with their attendants. Vaiśampāyana alone was absent, and he, according to the word of the Brahmans, committed brahmanicide. He then assembled his disciples, and desired them to perform, on his behalf, an expiation for his offence, and to meet and tell him what was salutary for the purpose. Yājñavalkya then said, ‘I myself will perform the penance; let all these munis refrain: inspired by my own devotion, I shall raise up strength.’ Incensed at this speech of Yājñavalkya [Vaiśampāyana] said to him, ‘Restore all that thou hast learned.’ Thus addressed, the sage, deeply versed in sacred lore, vomited forth the identical Yajush texts stained with blood, and delivered them to his teacher. Plunged in meditation, the Brahman then adored the sun, saying, ‘Sun, every sacred text which disappears [from the earth] goes to the sky, and there abides.’ The sun, gratified, and [appearing] in the form of a horse, bestowed on Yājñavalkya, son of Brahmarāta, all the Yajush texts which had ascended to the solar region. All the Yajush texts which are [?] studied by any priest, were given in the form of horses, [?] and in consequence these priests became Vājins. And the disciples of Vaiśampāyana, by whom the expiatory rite was accomplished, were called Charakas, from its accomplishment (charana).”²⁶

It is sufficiently evident from the preceding legend that the adherents of the two different divisions of the Yajurveda (the Taittiriya or black, and the Vājasaneyi or white), must in ancient times have regarded each other with feelings of the greatest hostility—feelings akin to those with which the followers of the rival deities, Vishnu and Śiva, look upon each other in modern days. On this subject I quote an extract from Professor Weber’s “History of Indian Literature.”

P. 84.—“Whilst the theologians of the Rik are called Bahvrichas, and those of the Sāman Chhandogas, the old name for the divines of the Yajush is Adhvaryu; and these old appellations are to be found in the Sanhitā of the Black Yajush (the Taittiriya), and in the Brahmana of the White Yajush (the Śatapatha Brahmana). The latter work applies the term Adhvaryus to its own adherents, whilst their opponents are denominated Charakādhvaryus, and are the objects of censure. This hostility is also exhibited in a passage of the Sanhitā of the White Yajush, where the Charakāchārya, as one of the human sacrifices to be offered at the Purushamedha, is devoted to Dushkrita or Sin.”²⁷

In his Indische Studien (iii. 454) Prof. Weber specifies the following passages in the Śatapatha Brahmana as those in which the Charakas, or Charakādhvāryus are censured, viz., iii. 8, 2, 24; iv. 1, 2, 19; iv. 2, 3, 15; iv. 2, 4, 1; vi. 2, 2, 1, 10; viii. 1, 3, 7; viii. 7, 1, 14, 24. Of these I quote one specimen (iv. 1, 2, 19):—Tā u ha Charakā nānaiva mantrābhyām juhvati prānodānau kurma iti vadantaḥ | Tad u tathā na kuryāt | mohayanti ha te yajamānasya prānodānāv apīdvā enam tūshnīm juhuyāt. “These the Charakas offer respectively with two mantras, saying thus: ‘These are his two breathings,’ and ‘we thus make these two breathings endowed with their respective powers.’ But let no one adopt this procedure, for they confound the breathings of the worshipper. Wherefore let this libation be offered in silence.”²³

But these sectarian jealousies were not confined to the different schools of the Yajur-veda; the adherents of the Atharva-veda seem to have evinced a similar spirit of hostility towards the followers of the other Vedas. On this subject Prof. Weber remarks as follows in his Indische Studien, i. 296. “A good deal of animosity is generally displayed in most of the writings connected with the Atharvan towards the other three Vedas; but the strongest expression is given to this feeling in the first of the Atharva Parisīshatas, chapter cxii.”

He then proceeds to quote the following passage from that work and chapter:—Bahvricho hanti vai rāshṭram adhvāryur nāśayet sutān | Chhandogo dhanam nāśayet tasmād Ātharvano guruḥ | Ajñānād vā pramādād vā yasya syād bahvricho guruḥ | deśa-rāshṭra-purāmātya-nāśas tasya na saṁśayaḥ | yadi vā find the Charākāchārya as the proper victim to be offered to Dushkrita or Sin. This passage, together with similar hostile expressions in the Śatapatha Brahmana, were evidently dictated by a feeling of animosity against the ancient schools of the Adhvāryus, whose sacred texts we possess in the Taittirīya-veda, and from whom Yājñavalkya seceded in order to become himself the founder of the new Charanas of the Vājasaneyins.”

²³ Though aided by a learned friend in rendering this passage, I am not certain of the perfect exactness of the translation. But there is no doubt whatever that the tendency of the text is hostile to the rival school of the Charakas.

 Bahvṛicha (Rig-veda priest) will destroy a kingdom; an Adhvaryu
 (Yajur-veda priest) will destroy offspring; and a Chhandoga (Sāma-veda priest) will destroy wealth;—hence an Atharvana priest is the [proper] spiritual adviser. Destruction of country, kingdom, cities, and ministers is certainly incurred by the [king] who, through ignorance or folly, takes a Bahvṛicha priest for his guide. Or if a king appoints an Adhvaryu priest to be his domestic chaplain, he loses his wealth and his chariots, and is speedily slain by the sword. As a lame man [makes no progress] on a road, and a creature which is not a bird [cannot] eat eggs [?], so no king prospers who has a Chhandoga for his teacher.
 He who has a Jalada or a Mauda for his priest, loses his kingdom after a year or ten months.”

“Thus,” continues Prof. Weber, “the author of the Parīśishta attacks certain sakhās of the Atharva-veda itself, for such are the Jaladas and the Maudas, and admits only a Bhārgava, a Paippalāda, or a Śaunaka to be a properly qualified teacher.
 He further declares that the Atharva-veda is intended only for the highest order of priest, the brahman, not for the three other inferior sorts.”

The following passage is then quoted:—*Atharvā sṛijate ghoram

Bhrigu [is to be placed] on the right hand. It is the brahman, and not the adhvaryu, the chhandoga, or the bahvricha, who can allay [portents]; the brahman wards off [?] raxases, wherefore the brahman is he who knows the Atharva.”

I subjoin another extract from Prof. Weber's Indische Studien, i. 63 ff., partly to complete what was said on the relation of the Sāma-veda to the Rig-veda in Part Second of this work, pp. 202, 203, and partly to illustrate the mutual hostility of the different schools. “To understand the relation of the Sāma-veda to the Rig-veda, we have only to form to ourselves a clear and distinct idea of the manner in which these hymns in general arose, how they were then carried to a distance by those tribes which emigrated onward, and how they were by them regarded as sacred, whilst in their original home, they were either—as living in the immediate consciousness of the people—subjected to modifications corresponding to the lapse of time, or made way for new hymns by which they were pushed aside, and so became forgotten. It is a foreign country which first surrounds familiar things with a sacred charm; emigrants continue to occupy their ancient mental position, preserving what is old with painful exactness, while at home life opens out for itself new paths. New emigrants follow those who had first left their home, and unite with those who are already settlers in a new country. And now the old and the new hymns and usages are fused into one mass, and are faithfully, but uncritically, learned and imbibed by travelling pupils from different masters (several stories in the Vrihad Aranyaka are especially instructive on this point, see Ind. Stud. p. 83), so that a varied intermixture arises. Others, again, more learned, then strive to introduce arrangement, to bring together what is homogeneous, to separate what is distinct; and in this way theological intolerance springs up; without which the rigid formation of a text or a canon is impossible. The influence of courts on this process is not to be overlooked; as, for example, in the case of Janaka, King of Videha, who in Yajnavalkya had found his Homer. Anything approaching to a clear insight into the reciprocal relations of the different schools will in vain be sought either from the Puranas or the Charanavyūha, and can only be attained by comparing the teachers named in the different Brahmanas and Sūtras, partly with each other and partly with the text of Pānini and the ganapāṭha and commentary connected therewith (for the correction of which a thorough examination of Patanjali would offer the only sufficient guarantee). For the rest, the relation between the S. V. and the R. V. is in a certain degree analogous to that between the White and the Black Yajush ; and, as in the Brahmana of the former (the Śatapatha Br.) we often find those teachers who are the representatives of the latter, mentioned with contempt, it cannot surprise us, if in the Brahmana of the Sāma-veda, the Paingins and Kaushitakins are similarly treated."

It will have become sufficiently manifest to the reader of the preceding passages which I have extracted from the Puranas concerning the division and different Śākhās of the Vedas, that the traditions which they embody contain very little real information in regard to the composition of the hymns, or the manner in which they were preserved, collected, or arranged. In fact, I have not adduced these passages for the purpose of elucidating those points, but to show the legendary character of the narratives, and their discrepancies in matters of detail. For an account of the Śākhās of the Vedas, the ancient schools of the Brahmans, and other matters of a similar nature, I must refer to the excellent work of Prof. Müller, the "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature," pp. 119-132 and 364-388 and elsewhere.

I proceed now to adduce some extracts from the works of the more systematic authors who have treated of the origin and authority of the Vedas, I mean the commentators on these books themselves, and the authors and expositors of the aphorisms of several of the schools of Hindu philosophy. Whatever we may think of the premises from which these writers set out, or of the conclusions at which they arrive, we cannot fail to be struck with the contrast which their speculations exhibit to the loose and mystical ideas of the Puranas and Upanishads, or to admire the acuteness of their reasoning, and the logical precision with which their arguments are presented.

I.—The first passage which I shall adduce is from Sayana's introduction to his commentary on the Rig-veda, the Vedārtha-prakāśa, pp. 3 ff. (Sayana, as we have seen in Part Second, p. 172, lived in the 14th century, A.D.) Nanu Veda eva tāvad nāsti | kutas tadavāntara-viśeṣha ṛigvedaḥ | Tathā hi | ko 'yaṁ vedo nāma | na hi tatra laxaṇaṁ pramāṇaṁ vā 'sti | nacha tad-ubhaya-vyatirekeṇa kiñchid vastu prasidhyati | Laxana-pramāṇābhyaṁ hi vastu-siddhir iti nyāyavidām matam | Pratyaxānumānāgameṣhu pramāṇa-viśeṣheṣhu antimo Veda iti tallaxaṇam iti chet | na | Manvādi-smṛitiṣhu ativyāpteḥ | Samaya-baleṇa samyak paroxānubhava-sādhanam ity etasya āgama-laxaṇasya tās-vapi sadbhāvāt | apaurusheyatve sati iti viśeṣhaṇād adosha iti chet | na | Vedasyāpi parameśvara-nirmītatvena paurusheyatvāt | Śarīra-dhāri-jīva-nirmītatvābhāvād apaurusheyatvam iti chet | [na ?] | 'Sahasra-śīrṣhā puruṣha' ityādi-śrutibhir īśvarasyāpi śarīritvāt | Karma-phala-rūpa-śarīra-dhāri-jīva-nirmītatvābhāva-mātreṇa apaurusheyatvaṁ vivaxitam iti chet | na | Jīva-viśeṣhair Agni-Vāyo-Ādityair vedānām utpāditatvāt | 'Rigveda evāgner ajāyata Yajurvedo vāyoḥ Sāmaveda ādityād' iti śruter īśvara-sya agnyādi-prerakatvena nirmāṛitvaṁ drashtavyam | mantra-brāhmaṇātmakeḥ śabda-rūṣir veda iti chet | na | Īdṛiṣo mantraḥ | īdṛiṣam brāhmaṇam ity anayor adyāpi anirṇātātāt | Tasmād nāsti kiñchid vedasya laxaṇam | Nāpi tat-sadbhāve pramāṇaṁ paśyāmaḥ | 'Rigvedaṁ bhagavo 'dhyemi Yajurvedaṁ Sāmavedam Ātharvaṇam chaturtham' ityādi vākyaṁ pramāṇam iti chet | na | tasyāpi vākya-sya vedāntakpātītvena ātmāśrayatva-prasaṅgāt | Na khalu nipuṇo 'pi svaskandham āroḍhuṁ prabhaved iti | 'Veda eva drījātīnām niḥśreyasa-karaḥ paraḥ' iti ādi smṛiti-

how, then, can there be a Rig-veda, forming a particular part of it? For what is this Veda? It has no characteristic sign or evidence; and without these two conditions, nothing can be proved to exist. For logicians hold that 'a thing is established by characteristic signs and by proof.' If you answer that 'of the three kinds of proof, perception, inference, and scripture, the Veda is the last, and that this is its sign;' then the objectors rejoin that this is not true, for this sign extends too far, and includes also Manu and the other Smritis; since there exists in them also this characteristic of Scripture, viz., that 'in virtue of common consent it is a perfect instrument for the discovery of what is invisible.' If you proceed, 'the Veda is faultless, in consequence of its characteristic that it has no person (purusha) for its author;' they again reply, 'Not so; for as the Veda was formed by Paramesvara (God), it had a person (purusha) for its author.' If you rejoin, 'It had no person (purusha) for its author, for it was not made by any embodied living being;' [they refuse²⁹ to admit this] on the ground that, according to such Vedic texts as 'Purusha has a thousand heads,' it is clear that Ívara (God) also has a body. If you urge that apaurusheyatva ('the having had no personal author') means that it was not composed by a living being endowed with a body which was the result of works;—the opponent denies this also, and asserts that the Vedas were created by particular living beings,—Fire, Air, and the Sun; for from the text 'the Rig-veda sprang from fire, the Yajur-veda from air, and the Sāma-veda from the sun,' etc., it will be seen that Ívara, by inciting fire and the others, was the maker. If you next say that the Veda is a collection of words in the form of Mantras and Brahmanas, the objectors rejoin, 'Not so, for it has never yet been defined that a Mantra is so and so, and a Brahmana so and so.' There exists, therefore, no characteristic mark of a Veda. Nor do we see any proof that a Veda exists. If you say that the text, 'I peruse, reverend sir, the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, and the Atharva as the fourth,' is a proof, the antagonist answers, 'No, for as that text is part of the Veda, it is exposed to the objection of depending upon itself; for no one, be he ever so clever, can mount upon his own shoulders.' If you again urge that such texts of the Smṛiti as this, 'It is the Veda alone which is supreme, and the source of blessedness to twice-born men,' are proofs, the objector rejoins, 'Not so; since these too must be rejected, as being founded on the same Veda.' The evidence of the senses and other ordinary sources of knowledge ought not even to be doubted. And common report in reference to the Veda, though universal, is erroneous, like such phrases as 'the blue sky,' etc. Wherefore, as the Veda is destitute of characteristic sign and proof, its existence cannot be admitted. Such is the first side of the question.

²⁹ I have translated this, as if there had been (which there is not) a negative particle na in the text, after the iti chet, as this seems to me to make the best sense. I understand from Prof. Müller that the negative particle is found in some of the MSS.

"To this we reply:—The definition of the Veda, as a work composed of Mantra and Brahmana, is unobjectionable. Hence Āpastamba says in the Yajñaparibhāṣā, the name of Mantra and Brahmana is Veda. The nature of these two things will be settled hereafter.³⁰ The sense we attach to the expression 'without any personal author' will also be declared further on. Let the proofs which have been specified of the existence of the Veda, viz., the Veda (itself), the Smṛiti, and common notoriety, be duly weighed. Although jars, cloth, and other such [dark] objects have no inherent property of making themselves visible, it is no absurdity to speak of the sun, moon, and other luminous bodies, as shining by their own light. Just in the same way (though it is impossible for beings like men to mount on their own shoulders) let the all-penetrating Veda be held to have the power of proving itself as it has of proving other things.³¹ Hence traditionists set forth this penetrating force of the Veda; thus, 'the Scripture is able to make known the past, the future, the minute, the near, the remote.' Such being the case, the authority of the Smṛiti, which is based on the Veda, and of common notoriety, which is based on both, is irresistible. Wherefore it stands fast that the Veda, which is established by characteristic sign, and by proof, cannot be refuted by Chārvākas or any other opponents.

"But let it be admitted that there is a thing called a Veda. Still it does not deserve, and is unfitted for, explanation, since it does not constitute proof. The Veda is no proof, as it is difficult to show that it has any sign of that character. Some define proof as the instrument of perfect apprehension; others say, it is that which conducts us to what was not before comprehended.' But neither of these definitions can be reasonably applied to the Veda. For the Veda consists of Mantra and Brahmana. Of these mantras some convey no meaning. Thus one is amyak sā ta, etc.; another is yadrīsmīn, etc.; a third is śrīnyeva, etc. The texts āpāntu,³² etc., and others are further examples. Now no meaning whatever is to be perceived through these mantras; and when they do not even convey an idea at all, much less can they convey a perfect idea, or be instruments of comprehension. Even if the mantra adhah svid āsīd upari svid āsīd, 'was it below or above?' (R. V. x. 129, 5) convey a meaning, still, like such sayings as 'either a post or a man,' it conveys a dubious meaning, and so possesses no authority. The mantra, deliver him, o plant, has for its subject, grass. Another, do not hurt him, axe, has for its subject an axe (xura). A third, hear stones, has for its subject, stones. In these cases, grass, an axe, and stones, though insensible objects, are addressed in the Veda as if they were intelligent. Hence these passages have no authority, because, like the saying, two moons, their import is absurd. So also the two texts, there is one Rudra, no second has existed, and the thousand Rudras who are over the earth, involving, as they do, a mutual contradiction (just as if one were to say, I have been silent all my life), cannot be authoritative. The mantra āpa undantu expresses the wetting of the sacrificer's head with water at the time of tonsure; while the text 'subhike, etc. (garland, mount on my head and decorate my face) expresses the placing of a garland formed of flowers on the heads of the bridegroom and bride, by way of blessing, at the time of marriage. Now, as these two last texts merely repeat a matter of common notoriety, they cannot be said to conduct us to what was not before comprehended. Wherefore the Mantra portion of the Veda is destitute of authority.

“To this we reply, the meaning of these texts 'amyak, etc., and the others has been explained by Yāska in the Nirukta. The fact that they are not understood by persons ignorant of that explanation, does not prove any defect in the mantras. It is customary to quote here the popular maxim, it is not the fault of the post that the blind man does not see it; the reasonable thing to say is that it is the man's fault.’ The mantra 'adhak svid, etc. (was it above or below?), is not intended to convey doubt, but rather to signify the extreme profundity of the supreme Essence, the cause of the world. With this view the author intimates by this turn of expression the difficulty which persons who are not versed in the deep Scriptures have, in comprehending such subjects. The same intention is manifested in the preceding mantras ko addhā veda, etc. (who knows? etc.) In the texts oshade, etc. (o herb, etc.), also the deities who preside over these several objects are addressed by these several names. These deities are referred to by the venerable Bādarāyana in the aphorism abhimāni-vyapadeśaḥ. As Rudra, though only one, assumes by his power a thousand forms, there is no contradiction between the different texts which relate to him. And though the moistening, etc., of the head by water, etc., is a matter of common notoriety, yet as the goodwill of the god who resides in these objects is not generally known, the text in question, by having that for its subject, is declaratory of what is unknown. Hence the Mantra portion of the Veda, being shown to have the characteristic mark [of constituting proof], is authoritative.”

Sāyana then, in p. 11 of his Preface, proceeds to extend his argument to the Brahmanas, and concludes (p. 19) that the authority of the whole Veda is proved.

II.—The second passage which I shall quote is from the Vedārtha-prakāśa of Mādhava Āchāryya on the Taittirīya Yajurveda (pp. 1 ff. in the Bibliotheca Indica). Mādhava was the brother of Sāyana, and flourished in the middle of the 14th century. (Colebrooke's Misc. “ Now, some may ask, what is this Veda, or what are its subject-matter, its use, its connection, or the persons who are competent to study it? and how is it authoritative? For, in the absence of all these conditions, the Veda does not deserve to be expounded. I reply : the book which makes known (vedayati) the supernatural (lit. non-secular) means of obtaining desirable objects, and getting rid of undesirable objects, is the Veda. By the employment of the word supernatural, [the two ordinary means of information, viz.] perception and inference, are excluded. By perception it is established that such things as garlands, sandal wood, and women are causes of gratification, and that the use of medicines and so forth is the means of getting rid of suffering. And we ascertain by inference that we shall in future experience, and that other men now experience, the same things. If it be asked whether, then, the happiness, etc., of a future birth be not in the same way ascertainable by inference, I reply that it is not, because we cannot get beyond generalities. Not even the most brilliant ornament of the logical school could, by a thousand inferences, without the help of the Vedas, discover the truths that the jyotishtoma and other sacrifices are the means of attaining happiness, and that abstinence from the flesh of an animal³³ struck with a poisoned arrow is the means of removing uneasiness. Thus it is not too wide a definition of the Veda to say that it is that which indicates supernatural expedients. Hence, it has been said, 'men discover by the Veda those expedients which cannot be ascertained by perception or inference; and this is the characteristic feature of the Veda.' These expedients, then, form the subject of the Veda; [to teach] the knowledge of them is its use; the person who seeks that knowledge is the competent student; and the connection of the Veda with such a student is that of a benefactor with the individual who is to be benefitted.

“ But, if such be the case, it may be said that all persons

³³ The only other sense of the word kalañja in Boehtlingk and Roth's Lexicon is tobacco. It may be doubtful, however, if that weed was known in India when this commentary was written; and perhaps the illustration may be a traditional one, derived from an earlier age. See Müller in the Z. D. M. G. vii. pp. 376, 377.

whatever, including women and sūdras, must be competent students of the Veda, since the aspiration after good and the deprecation of evil are common to the whole of mankind. But it is not so. For though the expedient exists, and women and sūdras are desirous to know it, they are debarred by another cause from being competent students of the Veda. The scripture (sāstra) which declares that those persons only who have been invested with the sacrificial cord are competent to read the Veda, intimates thereby that the same study would be a cause of unhappiness to women and sūdras [who are not so invested]. How, then, are these two classes of persons to discover the means of future happiness? We answer, from the Puranas and other such works. Hence it has been said, 'since the triple Veda may not be heard by women, sūdras, and degraded twice-born men, the Mahābhārata was, in his benevolence, composed by the Muni.' The Veda, therefore, has only a relation to men of the three superior classes who have obtained investiture.

"Then the authority of the Veda is self-evident, from the fact of its communicating knowledge. For though the words of men also communicate knowledge, still, as they must be conceived to participate in the fallibility of their authors, they require some primary authority to remedy that fallibility. But such is not the case with the Veda; for as that had no beginning, it is impossible to suspect any defect in the utterer. . . .

"A doubt may, however, be raised whether the Veda is not, like the works of Kālidāsa and others, derived from a personal being,³⁴ as it is said in the Veda to have been formed by Brahma, according to the text, 'the Rik and Sāma verses, the metres sprang from him; from him the Yajush was produced;'³⁵ in consequence of which Bādarāyana, in the aphorism³⁶ 'since he is the source of the sāstra,' has pronounced that Brahma is the cause of the Veda.

But this doubt is groundless ; for the eternity of the Veda has been declared both by itself, in the text, ‘with an eternal voice, o Virūpa,’³⁷ and by the Smṛiti in the verse ‘an eternal voice, without beginning or end, was uttered by the Self-existent.’³⁸ Bādarāyana, too, in his section on the deities (Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 29) has this aphorism, ‘hence also [its] eternity [is to be maintained].’ If it be objected that these authorities are mutually conflicting, I answer, No. For [in the passages where] the word eternity is applied to the Vedas, it is to be understood as referring to the period of action [or mundane existence]. This period is that which commences with the creation, and lasts till the destruction of the universe, since, during this interval, no worlds are seen to originate, or to be destroyed. Just as time and ether (space) are eternal, so also is the Veda eternal, because, during the period of mundane existence, it has not been composed by any person, as the works of Kālidāsa and others have been.³⁹ Nevertheless, the Veda, like time and space, is recorded in Scripture to have originated from Brahma at the first creation. There is, therefore, no discrepancy between the two different sets of passages, as they refer to different objects. And since Brahma is free from defect, the utterer of the Veda is consequently free from defect; and therefore a self-evidenced authority resides in it. Seeing, therefore, that the Veda possesses a characteristic mark, and is supported by proof, and that it has a subject, a use, a relation, and persons competent for its study, and, moreover, that its authority is established, it follows that it ought to be interpreted."

³⁹ The same subject is touched on by Sāyana, at p. 20 of his commentary, in these words :—Nānu bhagavatā Bādarāyanaena Vedasya Brahma-kāryyatvaṁ sūtritam | ‘śāstra-yonitvād’ iti | ṛigvedādi-śāstra-kāraṇatvād Brahma sarvajñam iti sūtrārthaḥ | bādham | na etavatā paurusheyatvam bhavati | manushya-nirmitatvābhāvāt | idṛṣam apaurusheyatvam abhipretya vyavahāra-daśāyām ākāśādi-vaḍ nityatvam Bādarāyanaenaiva devatādihikarane sūtritam | ‘ata evacha nityatvam’ iti. “But it is objected that the venerable Bādarāyana has declared in the aphorism ‘since he is the source of the śāstra’ (Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3), that the Veda is derived from Brahma ; the meaning of the aphorism being, that since Brahma is the cause of the Rig-veda and other S’āstras, he is omniscient. This is true ; but it is not sufficient to prove the human origin of the Veda, since it was not formed by a man. Bādarāyana had in view such a superhuman origin of the Veda, when in the [other] aphorism ‘hence also [its] eternity is to be maintained,’ (which is contained in the section on the deities), he declared its eternity, like that of space, etc., during the period of mundane existence.”

SECT. VII.—Arguments of the Mīmāṃsakas and Vedāntins in support of the eternity and authority of the Vedas.

I shall now proceed to adduce some of the reasonings by which the authors of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, and Vedānta aphorisms, and their commentators, defend the doctrine which, as we have already seen, is held by some of the Indian writers, that the Vedas are eternal, as well as infallible.

I. Pūrva Mīmāṃsā.—I quote the following texts of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā which relate to this subject from Dr. Ballantyne's aphorisms of the Mīmāṃsā, pp. 8 ff. I do not always follow the words of Dr. Ballantyne's translations, though I have made free use of their substance. (See also Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 306, or p. 195 of W. and N's. edit.) The commentator introduces the subject in the following way:—Śabdārthayor utpattyanantaram puruṣheṇa kalpita-saṅketātmake-sambandhasya kalpitatvāt puruṣa-kalpita-sambandha-jñānāpexitvāt śabdāsya yathā prat-

The remarks of S'ankara on the Brahma Sūtra (i. 1, 3) above referred to, begin as follows:—Mahata ṛig-vedādeḥ sāstrasya aneka-vidyū-sthānopabṛīmhitasya pradīpavat sarvārtha-dyotinas sarvajña-kalpasya yoniḥ kāraṇam Brahma | na hi tdrīśasya sāstrasya ṛigvedādi-lakṣaṇasya sarvajña-guṇānvītasya sarvajñād anyataḥ sambhavo 'sti. "Brahma is the source of a great S'āstra, consisting of the Rig-veda, etc., augmented by numerous branches of science, which, like a lamp, illuminates all subjects, and approaches to omniscience. Now such a S'āstra, distinguished as the Rig-veda, etc., possessed of the qualities of an omniscient being, could not have originated from any other than an omniscient being." See Dr. Ballantyne's Vedānta Aphorisms, pp. 7, 8.

yaxa-jñānam śūktikādau satyatvam vyabhicharati tatlā purushā-dhīnatreṇa śabde 'pi satyatva-vyabhichāra-sambhavāt na dharme chōdanā pramānam iti pūrva-paxe siddhāntam āha. “ Since, subsequently to the production of words and things, a conventional connection has been established between the two by the will of man, and since language is dependent upon a knowledge of this conventional connection determined by man, [it follows that] as perception is liable to error in respect of mother-of-pearl and similar objects [by mistaking them for silver], so words also may be open to convey unreal notions from [their sense] being dependant on human will ; and consequently that the Vedic precepts [which are expressed in such words, possessing a merely conventional and arbitrary meaning] cannot be authoritative in matters of duty. Such is an objection which may be urged, and in reply to which the author of the aphorisms declares the established doctrine.”

Then follows the fifth aphorism of the first chapter of the first book of the Mīmāṃsā :—Autpattikastu^(a) śabdasya^(b) arthena sambandhas^(c) tasya^(d) jñānam^(e) upadeśo^(f) 'vyatirekaścha^(g) arthe 'nupalabdhe^(h) tat⁽ⁱ⁾ pramānam Bādarāyaṇasya anapekṣatvāt | which may be paraphrased as follows :—“ The connection of a word with its sense is coeval with the origin of both. In consequence of this connection the words of the Veda convey a knowledge of duty, and impart unerring instruction in regard to matters imperceptible. Such Vedic injunctions constitute the proof of duty admitted by Bādarāyana, author of the Vedānta Sūtras, for this proof is independent of perception and all other evidence.”

I subjoin most of the remarks of the scholiast as given by Dr. Ballantyne, indicating by letters the words of the aphorism to which they refer.

(a) Autpattikaḥ | svābhāvikaḥ | nitya iti yāvāt | “ Autpattika (original) means natural, eternal in short.

(b) Śabdasya | nitya-veda-ghaṭaka-padasya 'agnihotraṃ juhuyāt svarga-kāma' ityādeḥ. “ Śabda (word) refers to terms which form part of the eternal veda, such as, 'the man who desires heaven should perform the Agnihotra sacrifice.'"

(c) Sambandha (connection) "in the nature of power," i.e. according to Dr. Ballantyne, depending on the divine will that such and such words should convey such and such meanings.

(d) Atas tasya | dharmasya | "'Hence' is to be supplied before 'this,' which refers to 'duty.'"

(e) Jñānam | atra karane lyut | jñāpter yathārtha-jñānasya karanam. "In the word jñāna (knowledge) the affix lyut has the force of 'instrument,' 'an instrument of correct knowledge.'"

(f) Upadeśaḥ | artha-pratipādanam. "Instruction, i.e. the establishment of a fact."

(g) Avyatirekaḥ | avyabhichārī dṛśyate ataḥ. "'Unerring,' i.e. that which is seen not to deviate therefrom."

(h) Nanu 'vahnimān' iti śabda-śravaṇānantaram pratyaxena vahnim dṛishtvā śabde pramātvam gṛhṇāti iti loke prasiddheḥ pratyaxādītara-pramāna-sāpexatvāt śabdasya sa katham dharme pramānam ata āha anupalabdhe iti | anupalabdhe pratyaxādi-pramānair ajñāte 'rthe. "Since it is a matter of notoriety that any one who has heard the words '[the mountain is] fiery' uttered, and afterwards sees the fire with his own eyes, is then [more than ever]-convinced of the authority of the words, it may be asked how words which are thus dependent [for confirmation] on perception and other proofs, can themselves constitute the proof of duty? In reference to this, the word anupalabdhe ('in regard to matters imperceptible') is introduced. It signifies 'matters which cannot be known by perception and other such proofs.'"

(i) Tat | vidhi-ghaṭita-vākyaṁ dharme pramānam Bādarāyaṇ-āchāryasya sammatam | ayam āśayaḥ | 'parvato vahnimān' iti doshavat-purusha-prayuktam vākyaṁ artham vyabhicharati | ataḥ prāmānya-nisḥaye pratyaxādīkam apexate | tathā 'gnihotraṁ juhōti iti vākyaṁ kāla-traye 'py artham na vyabhicharati | ata itara-nirapeṣam dharme pramānam. "This, i.e. a [Vedic]

sentence consisting of an injunction, is regarded by Bādarāyana also as proof of duty. The purport is this. The sentence, 'the mountain is fiery,' when uttered by a person defective [in his organ of vision], may deviate from the reality; it therefore requires the evidence of our senses, etc., to aid us in determining its sufficiency as proof. Whereas the Vedic sentence regarding the performance of the Agnihotra sacrifice can never deviate from the truth in any time, past, present, or future; and is therefore a proof of duty, independently of any other evidence."

The commentator then proceeds to observe as follows:—Pūrvāsūtre śabdārthayos sambandho nitya ity uktam | tachcha śabdānityatvā-vādimatam pūrva-paxam upādayati. "In the preceding aphorism it was declared that the connection of words and their meanings [or the things signified by them] is eternal. Desiring now to prove that this [eternity of connection] is dependent on the eternity of words [or sound], he begins by setting forth the first side of the question, viz., the doctrine of those who maintain that sound is not eternal."

This doctrine is accordingly declared in the six following aphorisms (sūtras), which I shall quote and paraphrase, without citing, in the original, the accompanying comments. These the reader will find in Dr. Ballantyne's work.

Sūtra 6.—Karma eke tatra darśanāt. "Some, i.e. the followers of the Nyāya philosophy, say that sound is a product, because we see that it is the result of effort, which it would not be if it were eternal."

Sūtra 7.—Asthānāt. "That it is not eternal, on account of its transitoriness, i.e. because, after a moment it ceases to be perceived."

Sūtra 8.—Karoti-śabdāt. "Because we employ in reference to it the expression making, i.e. we speak of making a sound."

Sūtra 9.—Sattvāntare yangapadyāt. "Because it is perceived by different persons at once, and is consequently in immediate contact with the organs of sense of those both far and near, which it could not be if it were one and eternal."

Sūtra 10.—Prakṛiti-vikṛityoścha. "Because sounds have both an original and a modified form; as, e.g. in the case of dadhi atra, which is changed into dadhy atra, the original letter i being altered into y by the rules of permutation. Now, no substance which undergoes a change is eternal."

Sūtra 11.—Vṛiddhiścha hartri-bhūmnā 'sya. "Because sound is augmented by the number of those who make it. Consequently the opinion of the Mīmāṃsakas, who say that sound is merely manifested, and not created, by human effort, is wrong, since even a thousand manifesters do not increase the object which they manifest, as a jar is not made larger by a thousand lamps."

These objections against the Mīmāṃsaka theory that sound is manifested, and not created, by those who utter it, are controverted in the following Sūtras:—

Sūtra 12.—Samam tu tatra darśanam. "But, according to both schools, viz., that which holds sound to be created, and that which regards it as merely manifested, the perception of it is alike momentary. But of these two views, the theory of manifestation is shown in the next aphorism to be the correct one."

Sūtra 13.—Sataḥ param adarśanaṃ viśhayānāgamat. "The non-perception, at any particular time, of sound, which, in reality, perpetually exists, arises from the fact that the utterer of sound has not come into contact with his object, i.e. sound. Sound is eternal, because we recognise the letter k, for instance, to be the same sound which we have always heard, and because it is the simplest method of accounting for the phenomenon to suppose that it is the same. The still atmosphere which interferes with the perception of sound, is removed by the conjunctions and disjunctions of air issuing from a speaker's mouth, and thus sound (which always exists, though unperceived) becomes perceptible.⁴⁰ This is the reply to the objection of its 'transitoriness' (Sūtra 7)."

An answer to Sūtra 8 is given in Sūtra 14.—Prayogasya param. "The word 'making' sounds, merely means employing or uttering them."

The objection made in Sūtra 9 is answered in Sūtra 15.—Āditya-vad yaugayadyam. "One sound is simultaneously heard by different persons, just as one sun is seen by them at one and the same time. Sound, like the sun, is a vast, and not a minute object, and thus may be perceptible by different persons, though remote from one another."

An answer to Sūtra 10 is contained in Sūtra 16.—Varnāntaram avikārah. "The letter y, which is substituted for i in the instance referred to under Sūtra 10, is not a modification of i, but a distinct letter. Consequently sound is not modified."

The 11th Sūtra is answered in Sūtra 17.—Nāda-vṛiddhiḥ parā. "It is an increase of noise, not of sound, that is occasioned by a multitude of speakers. The word noise refers to the 'conjunctions and disjunctions of the air' (mentioned under Sūtra 13), which enter simultaneously into the hearer's ear from different quarters; and it is of these that an increase takes place."

The next following Sūtras state the reasons which support the Mīmāṃsaka view:—

Sūtra 18.—Nityastu syād darśanasya parārthatvāt. "Sound must be eternal, because its utterance is intended to convey a meaning to other persons. If it were not eternal [or abiding], it would not continue till the hearer had learned its sense, and thus he would not learn the sense, because the cause had ceased to exist."

Sūtra 19.—Sarvatra yaugapadyāt. “Sound is eternal, because it is in every case correctly understood by many persons simultaneously; and it is inconceivable that they should all at once fall into a mistake.”

When the word go (cow) has been repeated ten times, the hearers will say that the word go has been ten times pronounced, not that ten words having the sound of go have been uttered; and this fact also is adduced as a proof of the eternity of sound in

Sūtra 20.—Saṅkhyābhāvāt. “Because each sound is not numerically different from itself repeated.”

Sūtra 21.—Anapexatvāt. “Sound is eternal, because we have no ground for anticipating its destruction.”

“But it may be urged that sound is a modification of air, since it arises from its conjunctions (see Sūtra 17), and because the Śikshā (or Vedānga treating of pronunciation) says that ‘air arrives at the condition of sound;’ and as it is thus produced from air, it cannot be eternal.” A reply to this difficulty is given in

Sūtra 22.—Prakhyābhāvāchcha yogyasya. “Sound is not a modification of air, because, if it were, the organ of hearing would have no appropriate object which it could perceive. No modification of air (held by the Naiyāyikas to be tangible) could be perceived by the organ of hearing, which deals only with intangible sound.”

Sūtra 23.—Linga-darśanāchcha. “And the eternity of sound is established by the argument discoverable in the Vedic text, ‘with an eternal voice, o Virūpa.’ (See above, p. 51). Now, though this sentence had another object in view, it, nevertheless, repeats the eternity of language, and hence sound is eternal.”

“But though words, as well as the connection of word and sense, be eternal, it may be objected—as in the following aphorism—that a command conveyed in the form of a sentence is no proof of duty.”

Sūtra 24.—Utpattau vā rachanāḥ syur arthasya atannimitatatrāt. “Though there be a natural connection between words and their meanings, the connection between sentences and their meanings is a factitious one, established by human will, from these meanings (of the sentences) not arising out of the meanings of the words. The connection of sentences with their meanings is not (like the connection of words with their meanings) one derived from inherent power (see Sūtra 5, remark ^(c), above, p. 54), but one devised by men; how, then, can this connection afford a sufficient authority for duty?"

An answer to this is given in

Sūtra 25.—Tad-bhūtānām kriyārthena samāmnāyo 'rthasya tannimittatvāt. "The various terms which occur in every Vedic precept are accompanied by a verb, because a perception (such as we had not before) of the sense of a sentence is derived from a collection of words involving a verb. For a precept is not comprehended unless the individual words which make it up are understood; and the comprehension of the meaning of a sentence is nothing else than the comprehension of the exact mutual relation of the meanings arising out of each word."

Sūtra 26.—Loke sanniyamāt prayoga-sannikarshaḥ syāt. "As in secular language the application of words is fixed, so also in the Veda they must be employed in an established sense which has been handed down by tradition."

The author now proceeds in the next following Sūtras to state and to obviate certain objections raised to his dogmas of the eternity and authority of the Vedas.

Sūtra 27.—Vedāṁśchāike sannikarsham purushākhyāḥ. "Some (the followers of the Nyāya) declare the Vedas to be of recent origin, i.e. not eternal, because the names of men are applied to certain parts of them, as the Kāṭhaka and Kauthuma."

This Sūtra, with some of those which follow, is quoted in Sāyana's commentary on the R. V. vol. i. pp. 19 and 20. His explanation of the present Sūtra is as follows:—

Yathā Raghuvamśādaya idānīntanās tathā vedā api | na tu vedā anādayaḥ | ata eva veda-kartritvena purushā ākhyāyante | Vaiyāsikam Bhārataṁ Vālmīkiyaṁ Rāmāyanam ity atra yathā

Bhāratādi-karṭritvena Vyāsādaya ākhyāyante tathā Kāṭhakāṃ Kauthumāṃ Taittirīyakam ity evaṃ tattad-veda-śākhā-karṭritvena Kāṭhādīnām ākhyātatvāt paurusheyāḥ | Nanu nityānām eva vedānām upādhyāya-vat sampradāya-pravarttakatvena Kāṭhākādi-sāmākhyaṃ syād ity āśaṅkya yuktyantaram sūtrayati | kā tarhi Kāṭhakādyākhyāyikāyā gatir ity āśaṅkya sampradāya-pravarttanāt sā iyam upapadyate. “Some say, that as the Raghuvansā, etc., are modern, so also are the Vedas, and that the Vedas are not eternal. Accordingly, certain men are named as the authors of the Vedas. Just as in the case of the Mahābhāratā, which is called Vaiyāsika (composed by Vyāsa), and the Rāmāyana, which is called Vālmīkiya (composed by Vālmīki), Vyāsa and Vālmīki are indicated as the authors of these poems; so, too, Katha, Kuthumi, and Tittiri are shown to be the authors of those particular Śākhās of the Vedas which bear their names, viz., the Kāṭhaka, Kauthuma, and Taittirīya; and consequently those parts of the Vedas are of human origin. In answer to this it is suggested that the Vedas, though eternal, have received the name of Kāṭhaka, etc., because Katha and others, as teachers, handed them down.”

This interpretation is accepted a little further on, in the remarks on one of the following Sūtras:—“What, then, is the fact in reference to the appellations Kāṭhaka, etc.? It is proved to have arisen from the circumstance that Katha, etc., handed down the Vedas.”

Sūtra 28.—Anitya-darśanāchcha. “It is also objected that the Vedas cannot be eternal, because we observe that persons, who are not eternal, but subject to birth and death, are mentioned in them. Thus it is said in the Veda ‘Babara Prāvahani desired,’ ‘Kusurubinda Auddālaki desired.’ Now, as the words of the Veda in which they are mentioned could not have existed before these persons were born, it is clear that these words had a beginning, and being thus non-eternal, they are proved to be of human origin.” (Babaraḥ Prāvahanir akāmayata ‘Kusuruvinda Auddālakir akāmayata’ ityādi vedeshu darśanāt teshāṃ jananāt prūg imāni vākyāni nāsann iti sādītōvād anityatvam paurusheyatvañcha siddham.)

These objections are answered in the following aphorisms :—

Sūtra 29.—Uktantu śabda-pūrvatvam. “But the priority—eternity—of sound has been declared, and, by consequence, the eternity of the Veda.”

Sūtra 30.—Ākhyā pravachanāt. “The names derived from those of particular men, attached to certain parts of the Vedas, were given on account of their studying those particular parts.
Thus the portion read by Katha was called Kāthaka, etc.”

Sūtra 31.—Parantu śrutih sāmānyam. “And names occurring in the Veda, which appear to be those of men, are appellations common to other beings besides men.”

“Thus the words Babara Prāvahanī are not the names of a man, but have another meaning. For the particle pra denotes ‘pre-eminence,’ vahana means ‘motion,’ and the letter i represents the agent; consequently the word prāvahanī signifies that which moves swiftly, and is applied to the wind, which is eternal.
Babara again is a word imitating the sound of the wind. Thus there is not even a semblance of error in the assertion that the Veda is eternal.” (*Yadyapi Babaraḥ Prāvahanīr ity asti pa-

Before proceeding to the 32nd Sūtra, I shall quote some further illustrations of the 31st, which are to be found in certain passages of the Introduction to Sāyana’s Commentary on the Rig-veda, where he is explaining another section of the Mīmāṃsā
Sūtras. The passages are as follows (p. 7) :—

mantra bhūta-pūrva iti gamyate. And in p. 10 :— Yad apy uktam pramagandādy-anityārtha-saṁyogād mantrasya anāditvaṁ na syād iti tatrottaram sūtrayati | Uktaś chānitya-saṁyoga iti | prathama-pādasya antimādhikarane so 'yam anitya saṁyoga-dosha uktah parikṛitah | Tathā hi | tatra pūrva-paxe Vedānām paurusheyatvaṁ vaktuṁ kāṭhakaṁ kālāpakam ity ādi purusha-sambandhābhidhānaṁ hetūkṛitya 'anityadarśanāchcha' iti hetvantaram sūtritam | 'Babarak prāvahanir akāmayata' ity anityānām Babarādīnām arthānām darśanāt tataḥ pūrvam asattvāt paurusheyo veda iti tasya uttaram sūtritam 'param tu śrutisāmānya-mātram' iti | tasya ayam arthah | yat kāṭhakādisamākhyānaṁ tat pravachana-nimittam | yat tu param Babarādyanitya-darśanaṁ tat 'śabda-sāmānya-mātraṁ na tu tatra Babarākhyah kaśchit purusho vivaxitah | kintu 'babara' iti 'śabdaṁ kurvan vāyur abhidhīyate | sachā prāvahaniḥ | prakarshena vahana-śīlah | Evam anyatrāpy ūhaniyam. “It is objected that the mantras are useless, because they are connected with temporal objects. Thus in the text, ‘what are thy cows doing among the Kikatas?’ (see Part Second, p. 362), a country called Kikata is mentioned, as well as a city named Naichaśākha, and a king called Pramaganda, all of them non-eternal objects. Such being the case, it is clear that this text did not exist before Pramaganda.” The answer to this is given in p. 10. “To the further objection that the mantras cannot be eternal, because such temporal objects as Pramaganda, etc., are referred to in them, an answer is given in the following Sūtra :—‘The connection with non-eternal objects has been already explained.’ In the last section of the first book, this very objection of the hymns being connected with non-eternal things has been stated and obviated (see above, Sūtras 28-31). For in the statement of objections, after it has first been suggested as a proof of the human origin of the Vedas, that they bear names, Kāthaka, Kālāpaka, etc., denoting their relation to men, a further difficulty is stated in a Sūtra, viz., that ‘it is noticed that non-eternal objects are mentioned in the Vedas;’ as, for example, where it is said that 'Babara Prāvahani desired.' Now, as it specifies non-eternal objects of this kind, the Veda, which could not have existed before those objects, must be of human origin. The answer to this is given in the aphorism, 'any further names are to be understood as common to other things.' The meaning is this: the names Kāthaka, etc., are given to the Vedas because they were expounded by Katha, etc.; and the further difficulty arising from the names of Babara and other objects supposed to be non-eternal, is removed by such names being common to other objects [which are eternal in their nature]. No persons called Babara, etc., are intended by those names, for babara is an imitation of a sound. Hence it designates the wind, which makes the sound babara. And prāvahani refers to the same object, as it means that which moves swiftly. The same method of explanation is to be applied in other similar cases."

I proceed to the 32nd Sūtra. It is asked how the Veda can constitute proof of duty when it contains such incoherent nonsense as the following: "Jaradgava, in blanket slippers, is standing at the door and singing benedictions. A Brahman female, desirous of offspring, asks, 'Pray, sir, what is the meaning of intercourse on the day of the new moon?' or the following: 'the cows attended this sacrifice.'" A reply is contained in Sūtra 32.—Kṛite vā viniyogaḥ syāt karmaṇaḥ sambandhāt.

 "The expressions to which objection is taken may be applicable to the duty to be performed, from the relation in which they stand to the ceremony."

As a different reading and interpretation of this Sūtra are given by Sāyana in his Commentary, p. 20, I shall quote it, and the remarks with which he introduces and follows it.

Nanu vede kvachid evaṁ śrūyate 'vanaspatayaḥ satram āsata sarpāḥ satram āsata' iti | tatra vanaspatīnām achetanavāt sarpānām chetanatve 'pi vidyārahitatvād na tad-anushṭhānaṁ sambhavati | Ato 'Jaradgavo gāyati madrakāni' ityādy-unmattabāla-vākya-sadrīśatvāt kenachit hrīto veda ity āśaṅkya uttaram

" But it will be objected that the Veda contains such sentences as this—'trees and serpents attended at the sacrifice.' Now, since trees are insensible, and serpents, though possessing sensibility, are destitute of knowledge, it is inconceivable that either the one or the other should assist at the ceremony. Hence, from its resembling the silly talk of madmen and children, as where it says, 'Jaradgava sings songs fit only for the Madras' (see Part Second, pp. 481 ff.), the Veda must have been composed by some man. The answer to this doubt is contained in the following Sūtra (which I can only render by a paraphrase):—'If prescribed by mere human authority, no rite can have any efficacy; but such ceremonies as the jyotishṭoma rest on the authority of the Veda; and texts such as that regarding the trees and serpents have the same intention, i.e. to commend sacrifice.' If the sentence enjoining the jyotishṭoma sacrifice had been composed by any man, that sacrifice, enjoined by such an authority, would not have been applicable as a means of attaining paradise; for no man can know what is the means of accomplishing such an end. But the application in question is prescribed in the Veda by the words 'let him who seeks paradise, sacrifice with the jyotishtoma.' Now this injunction does not resemble the talk of a madman, since we recognize in it, as in injunctions of a secular kind, the contemplation of the three necessary modes of the action to be performed. For, as when a question is put in regard to the object for which, the instrument through which, and the manner in which the secular precept, 'to feed Brahmans,' is to be fulfilled,—we are told that the object is to be their satisfaction, the instrumental substance boiled rice, and the manner that it is to be served up with vegetables and condiments; in the same way, in the Vedic injunction regarding the jyotishtoma, we are told that paradise is the object, that soma is the instrumental substance, and that the application of the introductory and other portions of the ritual is the manner. And when this is so, how can this precept be compared to the talk of a madman? Nor does the sentence regarding trees, etc., attending at a sacrifice admit of such a comparison, since the sacrifice in question is similarly circumstanced with the jyotishtoma. For the logicians say that the meaning of a word is the sense which it is intended to intimate. The purport of the sentence regarding the jyotishtoma, which is of a preceptive character, is to command performance. The object of the sentence regarding trees, etc., attending at a sacrifice, which is of a narrative character, is eulogy; and this can be offered even by an insensible [?] object. The sacrifice is eulogized by saying that it was celebrated even by insensible trees and ignorant serpents: how much more, then, by Brahmans possessed both of sensation and knowledge!"

II.—The Vedānta.—I proceed to adduce the reasonings by which Bādarāyana, the author of the Brahma, Vedānta, or Śārīraka Sūtras, as expounded by Śankara Āchāryya in his

Śārīraka-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣya, or commentary on those Sūtras, corroborates the arguments of Jaimini in regard to the eternity and consequent authority of the Veda. After discussing the question whether any persons but Hindus of the three highest tribes are qualified for divine knowledge, the author of the Sūtras comes to the conclusion that Śūdras, or persons of the fourth tribe, are incompetent, while beings superior to man, the gods, are competent (Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 348, or p. 223 of W. and N.'s ed.) In Sūtra i. 3, 26, the author determines that the gods have a desire for final emancipation, owing to the instability of their power, and a capacity for acquiring a knowledge of Brahma, because they are corporeal beings; and that there is no obstacle which prevents their attaining such divine knowledge. A difficulty, however, having been raised that the gods cannot be corporeal, because, if they were so, it is necessary to conceive that they would be corporeally present at, and form (as priests actually do) a part of the ceremonial of, sacrifice, which would not consist with the usual course of such ceremonies, at which the gods are not seen to be corporeally present, and would, in fact, involve an impossibility, since Indra, for example, being but one, could not be corporeally present at numerous sacrifices at once;—this difficulty is solved (under Sūtra i. 3, 27) in two ways, either by supposing (1) that the gods assume different forms, and are present at many sacrifices at once, though invisible to mortals; or by considering (2) that, as a sacrifice is offered to a deity, many persons may present their oblations to that deity at once, just as one Brahman may be saluted by many different persons at the same time. It is, therefore, concluded that the corporeal nature of the gods is not inconsistent with the practice of sacrifice. Having settled these points, Śankara comes to Sūtra i. 3, 28.

“Sūtra i. 3, 28 :—‘ But it is said that there will be a contradiction in respect of sound (or the word); but this is not so, because the gods are produced from it, as is proved by intuition and inference.’

“Be it so, that though the corporeality of the gods, etc., be admitted, no contradiction will arise in respect of the ceremonial. Still [it will be said that] a contradiction will arise in regard to the word. How? [In this way.] By founding upon the ‘inherent connection of a word with the thing signified,’ the authority of the Veda had been established by the aphorism ‘anapevāt,’ etc. (Mīmāṃsā Sūtras i. 2, 21; see above, p. 58.) But now, since it has been asserted that the deities are corporeal, it will follow that (though from their possession of divine power they can at one and the same time partake of the oblations offered at numerous sacrifices), they will still, owing to their corporeality, be subject, like ourselves, to birth and death; and hence, the eternal connection of the eternal word with an object which is non-eternal being lost, a contradiction will arise in regard to the authority proved to belong to the word of the Veda; [for thus the word, not having any eternal connection with the non-eternal thing, could not be eternal, and not being eternal, could not be authoritative]. But this supposed contradiction has no existence. How? ‘Because they are produced from it.’ Hence the world of gods, etc., is produced from the Vedic word. But according to the aphorism (Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 2) ‘from him the production, etc., of all this is derived,’ it is established that the world has been produced from Brahma. How, then, is it said here that it is produced from the word? And, moreover, if it be allowed that the world is produced from the Vedic word, how is the contradiction in regard to the word thereby removed, inasmuch as all the following classes of beings, viz., the Vasus, Rudras,

Ādityas, Viśvedevas, Maruts, are non-eternal, because produced ; and when they are non-eternal, what is there to bar the non-eternity of the Vedic words Vasu, etc., by which they are designated ? For it is a common saying, ' When a son is born to Devadatta, that son receives the name of Yajnadatta,' [i.e. no child receives a name before it exists]. Hence a contradiction does arise in regard to [the eternity of] the word. To this objection we reply with a negative ; for in the case of such words as cow we discover an eternal connection between the word and the thing. For although individual cows, etc., come into existence, the species to which they belong does not begin to exist, as it is individual substances, qualities, and acts, which begin to exist, and not their species. Now it is with species that words are connected, and not with individuals, for as the latter are infinite, such a connection would in their case be impossible. But as species are eternal (though individuals begin to exist) no contradiction is discoverable in the case of such words as cow, etc. In the same way it is to be remarked that though we allow that the individual gods, etc., have commenced to exist, there is no contradiction [to the eternity of the Vedic word] in the [existence of the] words Vasu, etc. [which denote those individual gods], since species are eternal. And the fact that the gods, etc., belong to particular species may be learned from this, that we discover their corporeality and other attributes in the hymns and arthavādas (explanatory remarks in the Vedas), etc. The words Indra, etc., are derived from connection with some particular post, like the words 'commander' (senapāti), etc. Hence, whosoever occupies any particular post, is designated by the words Indra, and so forth ; and therefore Indra and the other gods belong to the species of occupants of particular posts. Thus there is no difficulty. And this derivation from the word is not, like production from Brahma, meant in the sense of evolution from a material cause. How, then (since language is eternal and connected with eternal objects), is it declared in the phrase 'produced from it' that the production of individual beings, in the ordinary sense of the expression, is effected by a thing (sound or language), the very nature of which it is to denote continuance [and not such change as is involved in the idea of production?] How, again, is it known that the world is produced from the word? The answer is, [it is known] ‘from intuition and inference.’ ‘Intuition’ means the Veda, because it is independent of any (other) authority. ‘Inference’ means the smṛiti, because it is dependent on another authority (the Veda). These two demonstrate that the creation was preceded by the word. Thus the Veda says, ‘at (or with) the word ete (these) Prajāpati created the gods; at asṛigram (they were poured out) he created men; at indavaḥ (drops of soma) he created the pitris; at tiraḥ pavitram (through the filter) he created the planets; at āsavaḥ (swift) he created hymns; at viśvāni (all) he created praise; and at the words abhi saubhagā (for the sake of blessings) he created the other creatures.’⁴¹ And in another place it is said ‘with his mind he produced speech, [as] a mate.’ (Vrih. Ar. Up. p. 50.) By these and other such texts the Veda declares that creation was preceded by the word. And when the Smṛiti says, ‘At first a divine voice, eternal, without beginning or end, formed of the Vedas, was uttered by Svayambhū, from which all activities [proceeded]’ (see above, p. 4, note 2), the expression utterance of the voice is to be regarded as employed out of deference to the customary phraseology, since it is inconceivable that a voice which was ‘without beginning or end,’ could be uttered in the same sense as other sounds. Again, we have this other text, ‘In the beginning Maheśvara created from the words of the Veda the names and forms of creatures, and their several modes of action;’

and again, 'He created in the beginning the several names, functions, and conditions of all creatures from the words of the Veda.' (See above, p. 4, note 2.) And it is a matter of common observation to us all, that when any one is occupied with any end which he wishes to accomplish, he first calls to mind the word which expresses it, and then proceeds to effect his purpose. So, too, in the case of Prajāpati the creator, we conclude that before the creation the words of the Veda were manifested in his mind, and that afterwards he created the objects which resulted from them. Thus the Vedic text which says, 'uttering bhūr, he created the earth (bhūmi), etc.,' intimates that the different worlds, earth and the rest, were manifested, i.e. created from the words bhūr, etc., manifested in his mind. Of what sort, now, was this word which is intended, when it is said that the world was produced from the word? It was sphoṭa (disclosure or expression), we are told."

I shall not quote the long discussion (extending over two quarto pages) on which Śankara here enters, regarding this term. (See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 305, ff.; Ballantyne's Christianity Contrasted with Hindu Philosophy, pp. 192 ff.; the same author's translation of the commencement of the Mahābhāshya, p. 10; and Müller's article on the last-named work in the journal of the German Or. Soc. vii. 170). Śankara states his conclusion to be that "from the eternal word, in the form of sphoṭa, which designates [all things], the object to be designated, viz., the world, under the three characters of action, causer, and the results of action, is produced," and finishes his remarks on this Sūtra (i. 3, 28) by observing: "Consequently there is no contradiction in saying that the individual gods, etc., are derived from eternal words." He then proceeds to Sūtra i. 3, 29:—"Hence results the eternity of the Vedas." On this he observes, "The eternity of the Veda had been established by the fact that it was remembered by its Self-dependent Maker. But a doubt had been suggested that this eternity is inconsistent with the admission that individual gods, etc., have commenced to exist. This doubt, however, having been set aside by the preceding aphorism, 'Since they are produced from it,' he now confirms the eternity of the Veda (which had been already proved) by the words of the Sūtra before us; which mean that as a result of this very fact that the world, consisting of gods and other beings belonging to fixed species, was produced from the words of the Vedas, the eternity of these Vedic words themselves also must be believed. Accordingly, the words of the hymn, 'by sacrifice they followed the path of Vāch, and found her entered into the rishis' (R. V. x. 71, 3; see Part Second, p. 220) prove that Vāch already existed when she was discovered. And in the very same way Vedavyāsa records that, 'formerly the great rishis, empowered by Svayambhū, obtained through devotion the Vedas and Itihāsas, which had disappeared at the end of the preceding yuga.'

SECT. VIII.—Arguments of the followers of the Nyāya and Sāṅkhya Systems in support of the authority of the Vedas, but against the eternity of sound.

I.—The Nyāya.—The eternity of sound is, as we have already discovered from the allusions of the Mīmāṃsaka commentator, (above p. 55), denied by the followers of the Nyāya school. The consideration of this subject is begun in the following way in the Nyāya aphorisms of Gotama, as explained by Viśvanātha Bhaṭṭāchārya in the Nyāya-sūtra-vṛitti, ii. 81.

Vedasya prāmāṇyam āpta-prāmāṇyāt siddham | na cha idaṃ yujyate vedasya nityatvād ity āśaṅkāyāṃ varṇānām anityatvāt kathaṃ tatsamudāya-rūpasya vedasya nityatvam ity āśayena śabdānityatva-prakaranam ārabhate | tatra siddhānta-sūtram | 'Ādimattvād aindriyakatvāt kṛitakatvād upachārāchcha' | 81 | śabdo 'nitya ityādiḥ | ādimattvāt sakāraṇakatvāt | nanu na sakāraṇakatvaṃ kaṇṭha-tālvādy-abhigḥātāder vyañjakatvenāpy upapatter ata āha aindriyakatvād iti sāmānyavattve sati vahir-indriya-janya-laukika-pratyaxa-vishayatvād ity arthaḥ |

Aprayojakatvam āśankya āha kṛitaketi | kṛitake ghaṭādau yathā upachāro jñānaṁ tathāiva kāryyatva-prakāraka-pratyaxa-vishayatvād ityarthaḥ | tathā cha kāryatvena anāhāryya-sārvalaukika-pratyaxa-balād anityatvam eva siddhati. “It has been proved (in the 68th Sūtra, see below) that ‘the authority of the Veda follows from the authority of the wise person who made it.’ But it may be objected that this is not a proper ground on which to base the authority of the Veda, since it is eternal. With the view of proving, in opposition to this, that since letters are not eternal, the Veda, which is a collection of letters, cannot be so either, the author of the Sūtras commences the section on the non-eternity of sound. The Sūtra laying down the established doctrine is as follows:—‘Sound cannot be eternal, as (1) it had an origin, as (2) it is cognizable by sense, and (3) it is spoken of as factitious.’ Sound is non-eternal, etc., because (1) it had a beginning, i.e., because it had a cause. But it may be said that it had no cause, as, agreeably to the doctrine of the Mīmānsakas (see above, p. 56), the action of the throat and palate in pronunciation may merely occasion a manifestation of sound without creating it. In reply to this, it is said (2) that sound is cognizable by sense, i.e., that though it belongs to a genus, it is an object of ordinary perception through an external sense.” [A different explanation given by other interpreters is next quoted, which I omit.] “Then surmising that the preceding definition may be regarded as not to the point, the author adds the words ‘as it is spoken of as factitious,’ i.e., as jars and other such objects are spoken of as,—are known to be,—products, so, too, sound is distinguishable by sense as being in the nature of a product. And in consequence of this necessary [or incontrovertible?] and universal perception of its being produced, it is proved that it cannot be eternal.” [Two other explanations of this last clause of the Sūtra are then added.]

Leaving the reader to study the details of the discussion in Dr. Ballantyne’s aphorisms of the Nyāya (Part Second, pp.

77 ff.), I will pass over most of the Sūtras, and merely quote the principal conclusions of the Nyāya aphorist. In Sūtra 86 he says, in opposition to the 13th Sūtra of the Mimāṃsa (above, p. 56);

86.—‘ Prāg uchchāraṇād anupalambhād āvaraṇādy-anupalabdheḥ ’ | Śabdo yadi nityaḥ syād uchchāraṇāt prāg apy upalabhyeta śrotra-sannikarsha-sattvāt | na cha atra pratibandhakam asti ityāha āvaraneti āvaraṇādeḥ pratibandhakasya anupalabdhyā abhāva-nirṇayāt | deśāntara-gamanantu śabdasya amūrttatvād na sambhāvyaḥ | atīndriyānanta-pratibandhakatva-kalpanām apexya śabdānityatva-kalpanā eva laghīyasī iti bhāvaḥ. “ ‘ Sound is not eternal, because it is not perceived before it is uttered, and because we do not perceive anything which should intercept it.’ If sound were eternal, it would be perceived even before it was uttered, from its being in contact with the ear. [Sound, as Dr. Ballantyne explains, is admitted to be a quality of the all-pervading ether.] And in the next words the aphorist says that there is no obstacle to its being so heard, since the non-existence of any hindrance, such as an intercepting medium, is ascertained by our not perceiving anything of that sort. And it is not conceivable that sound should have gone to another place [and for that reason be inaudible], since it has no defined form. The supposition that sound is non-eternal, is simpler than the supposition that there are an infinity of imperceptible obstacles to its perception.”

The 89th and 90th Sūtras, with part of the comments on them, are as follows :—89. ‘ Asparśatvāt ’ | śabdo nityaḥ | asparśatvād gagana-vad iti bhāvaḥ | 90. ‘ Na karmānityatvāt ’ | asparśatvaṃ na śabda-nityatva-sādhakam karmāṇi vyabhichārāt. 89. “ It may be said that sound is eternal, from its being, like the sky, intangible. 90. But this is no proof, for the intangibility of sound does not establish its eternity, since these two qualities do not always go together; for intangibility, though predicable, e.g., of action, fails to prove its eternity.”

śa-kāraṇānupalabdheḥ | 101. ‘Aśravaṇa-kāraṇānupalabdheḥ satata-śravaṇa-prasaṅgaḥ’ | Yady apratyaxād abhāva-siddhis tadā śravaṇa-kāraṇasya apratyaxatvād aśravaṇam na syād iti satata-śravaṇa-prasaṅga iti bhāvah || 102. ‘Upalabhyamāne cha anupalabdher asattvād anapadeśah’ || Anumānādinā upalabhyamāne vināśa-kāraṇe anupalabdher abhāvāt tvadīyo hetur anapadeśah asādhakah asiddhatvāt | janyabhāvatvena vināśa-kalpanam iti bhāvah. “It is said (100) that ‘sound must be eternal, because we perceive no cause why it should cease.’ The answer is (101), first, ‘that if the non-existence of any such cause of cessation were established by the mere fact of its not being perceived, such non-perception would occasion our hearing continually, which is an absurdity.’ And (102), secondly, ‘since such non-perception is not a fact, inasmuch as [a cause of the cessation of sound] is perceived, this argument falls to the ground.’ Since a cause for the cessation of sound is discovered by inference, etc., and thus the non-perception of any cause is seen to be untrue, this argument of yours proves nothing, because its correctness is not established. The purport is that we suppose, from sound being produced, that it must also be liable to perish.”

Sūtras 106—122 are occupied with a consideration of the question (above treated, pp. 56, 57, in Sūtras 10 and 16 of the Mīmāṃsā) whether letters can change or not. The conclusion at which Gotama arrives is, that the substance of letters cannot undergo any alteration, though they may be said to change when they are modified in quality by being lengthened, shortened, etc.

In a preceding part of the Second Book (Sūtras 57—68) Gotama treats of the Veda, and repels certain charges which are alleged against its authority. I shall quote most of these aphorisms, and cite the commentary more fully than Dr. Ballantyne has done. (See Ballantyne’s Nyāya Aphorisms, Part ii. pp. 56 ff.)

Sūtras i. 8) that verbal evidence is of two kinds, (1) that of which the subject-matter is seen, and (2) that of which the subject-matter is unseen. With the view, now, of testing the authority of that verbal evidence which refers to unseen things, viz., the Veda, Gotama states the first side of the question.
Sūtra 57. ‘The Veda has no authority, since it has the defects of falsehood, self-contradiction, and tautology.’ That verbal evidence which is distinct from such as relates to visible objects, i.e., the Veda, has no authority. Why? Because it has the defects of falsehood, etc. Of these defects, that of ‘falsehood’ is exemplified in the fact that we sometimes observe that no fruit results from performing the sacrifice for a son, or the like.
‘Self-contradiction’ is a discrepancy between a former and a later declaration. Thus the Veda says, ‘he sacrifices when the sun is risen; he sacrifices when the sun is not yet risen; he sacrifices in the morning twilight. A tawny [demon?] carries away the oblation of him who sacrifices after the sun has risen; a brindled [demon?] carries off the oblation of him who sacrifices before the sun has risen; and both of these two carry off the oblation of him who sacrifices in the morning twilight.’ Now here there is a contradiction between the words which enjoin sacrifices and the words which intimate by censure that those sacrifices will occasion disastrous results. Again, the Veda has no authority, owing to its 'tautology,' as where it is said, 'he repeats the first thrice, he repeats the last thrice.' For as the lastness ultimately coincides with [?] the firstness, and as there is a triple repetition of the words, this sentence is tautological. Now since these particular sentences have no authority, the entire Veda will be proved by these specimens to stand in the same predicament, since all its other parts have the same author, or are of the same character, as these portions."

Here follows the Sūtra which conveys the established doctrine. "58. 'The Veda is not false; it is owing to some fault in the ceremonial, or the performer, or the instrument he employs, that any sacrifice is ineffectual.' Faults in the ceremonial are such as its not being according to rule. Faults in the performer are such as ignorance. Faults in the instrument, i.e., in the clarified butter, etc., are such as its not being duly sprinkled, etc. For falsehood might be charged on the Veda, if no fruit resulted from a sacrifice when duly performed; but such is not the case."

Gotama next repels the charge of self-contradiction in the Vedas. "59. 'There is no self-contradiction, for the fault is only imputed in case the sacrifice should be performed at a different time from that at first intended.' The fault imputed to these sacrifices in the text in question would [only] be imputed if, after agreeing, at the time of placing the sacrificial fire, to perform the sacrifice after sunrise, one were to change it to a sacrifice before sunrise; there is, therefore, no self-contradiction in the passage referred to."

He next rebuts the charge of tautology. "60. 'The Veda is not tautological, because repetition may be proper.' The particle 'cha' means again. 'Again, since repetition may be proper, there is no tautology.' For repetition is only a fault when it is useless. But in the passage referred to, since repetition is proper, its utility is apparent. For when the first and the last of the eleven sāmīdhenis (forms of prayer used on throwing fuel into the fire) are each repeated thrice, the whole number of verses will be made up to fifteen.⁴² Accordingly, this number of fifteen is mentioned in these words of the Veda, 'I smite this enemy who hates us, and whom we hate, with the last of the fifteen verses, and with the thunderbolt of my words.'

He next observes that the advantage of repetition is commonly recognised. "61. 'And the Veda is not tautological, because the utility of this division of discourse is admitted, i.e., because the necessity for a division of language, that is, of a description of language characterized as reiterative, is acknowledged by the learned. For by dividing language into the different classes of injunctive, reiterative, etc., learned men recognise the uses of the reiterative also. And this applies to the Veda."

The author of the aphorisms then proceeds to state and to define (in Sūtras 62—67) the different sorts of discourse employed in the Veda, and to defend the propriety of reiteration. "Having thus refuted the arguments which aim at showing that the Veda is of no authority, he goes on to prove its authority. 68. 'The authority of the Veda, like that of the spells and the medical treatise, follows from the authority of the wise [person who made it].' Since a wise [person], the maker of a Veda, possesses authority, i.e., is one who inculcates truth, it results from the force of the terms that the Veda was uttered by a person of this character; and by this reasoning the authority of the Veda is to be inferred. He illustrates this by the case of the spells and medical treatise. By spells (mantra) are meant the formulæ which neutralize poison, etc., and the section of the medical treatise (āyurveda) forms part of the Veda. Now as the authority of these two writings is admitted by general consent, the authority of everything which possesses the characteristics of the Veda must be inferred from this example. Some, however, explain the aphorism thus: a Veda is that in which authority is found or recognized. From such vedicity (or possession of the character of a Veda), the authority of any work is to be inferred.”

⁴² If there are in all eleven formulæ, and two of these are each repeated thrice, we have ($2 \times 3 =$) six to add to the nine (which remain of the original eleven), making ($6 + 9 =$) fifteen. See Müller's Anc. Sans. Lit. pp. 89 and 393.

It is not necessary to regard this 68th Sūtra as expressing the ultimate grounds on which Gotama would have vindicated the authority of the Vedas against its gainsayers. It is sufficient to consider the aphorism as merely indicating the proper basis on which the great logician thought that the infallibility of the Vedas should be defended, in opposition to those who maintained that their authority was derived from their eternity. Gotama denied this eternity, and deduced the infallibility of the Vedas from the infallibility of their author. In arguing with a disbeliever in the Vedas, he would have had to prove that they had really proceeded from an infallible author.

II. The Sāṅkhya.—The opinions of the author of the Sāṅkhya aphorisms in regard to the authority of the Veda and the principles on which that authority depends, are contained in the 45th to the 51st aphorisms of the Fifth Book, which I extract with the comments of Vijnāna Bhikshu.⁴³ 45. ‘Na nityatvaṃ Vedānāṃ kāryatva-śruteḥ’ || ‘Sa tapo ’tapyata tasmāt tapas tepānāt trayo vedā ajāyanta’ ity ādi-śruter vedānāṃ na nityatvam ity arthaḥ | veda-nityatā-vākyāni cha sajātīyānupūrvī-pravāhānuchcheda-parāṇi | Tarhi kim paurusheyā vedāḥ | na ityāha || 46. ‘Na paurusheyatvaṃ tatkartuḥ purushasya abhāvāt’ || īśvara-pratishedād iti śeshaḥ | sugamam | aparāḥ karttā bhavato ity ākāṅkṣyām āha || 47. ‘Muktāmuktayor ayogyatvāt’ || Jivanmukta-dhurīṇo Viśṇur viśuddha-sattvatayā niratiśaya-sarvajño ’pi vītarāgatvāt sahasra-śākha-veda-nirmāṇāyogyah | amuktas tv asarvajñatvād eva ayogyā ity arthaḥ | nanv evam apaurusheyatvād nityatvam eva āgatam | tatrāha || 48. ‘Na apaurusheyatvād nityatvam ankurādi-vat’ || Spasṭam | nanv ankurādisho api kāryatvena ghaṭādi-vat paurusheyatvam anumeyam | tatrāha || 49. ‘Teshām api tadyoge dṛiṣṭa-bādhādi-prasaktiḥ’ || Yat paurusheyam tach chharīra-janyam iti vyāptir loke dṛiṣṭā tasyā

“Sūtra 45. ‘Eternity cannot be predicated of the Vedas, since various texts in these books themselves declare them to have been produced.’ The sense is this, that the Vedas are proved not to be eternal by such texts as the following: ‘He performed austerity; from him, when he had thus performed austerity, the three Vedas were produced.’ [See above, p. 3.] Those other texts which assert the eternity [or perpetuity] of the Vedas refer merely to the unbroken continuity of the stream of homogeneous succession [or tradition]. Are the Vedas, then, derived from any personal author? ‘No,’ he replies in Sūtra 46. ‘The Vedas are not derived from any personal author (paurusheya), since there is no person (purusha) to make them.’ We must supply the words, ‘since an Īśvara (God) is denied.’ The sense is easy. In answer to the supposition that there may be some other maker, he remarks, Sūtra 47, ‘No; for there could be no fit maker, either liberated or unliberated.’ Vishnu, the chief of all those beings who are liberated even while they live,⁴⁴ though, from the pure goodness of his nature, he is possessed of perfect omniscience, would, owing to his impassiveness, be unfit to compose the Veda consisting of a thousand sākhās (branches), while any unliberated person would be unfit for the task from want of omniscience. (See Śankara's comment on Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3; above, p. 52, note.) But does not, then, the eternity of the Vedas follow from their having no personal author? He replies (48), 'Their eternity does not result from their having no personal author, since they resemble a bud, which sprouts from some root.' This is clear. But is it not to be inferred that buds, etc., since they are products, have, like jars, etc., some personal maker? He replies (49), 'If such a supposition were applied to the Vedas, it would there also be exposed to the objection that it is contrary to what we see, etc.' Whatever is derived from a personal author is produced from a body; this is a rule which is seen to hold invariably. But if we assert that the Vedas are derived from a personal author, we contradict the rule in question, [since the Vedas evidently did not spring from any one's body]. But are not the Vedas, too, derived from a person, seeing that they were uttered by the primeval Purusha? He answers (50), 'That object only (even though it be an invisible one), which its maker is conscious of having made, can be said to be derived from [or made by] a person.' It is only those objects, be they seen or unseen, in regard to which a consciousness of design arises, that are ordinarily spoken of as made by a person. The sense is, that it is not mere utterance by a person which constitutes formation by that person (since we do not ordinarily speak of the inspirations and expirations of any person during the time of sleep, as being formed by that person), but only utterance with conscious design. But the Vedas proceed of their own accord from Svayambhū (the self-existent), like an expiration, by the force of adrishṭa (destiny), without any consciousness on his part. Hence they are not formed by any person. Thus the Veda says, 'This Rig-veda, etc., is the breath of this great Being, etc.' [See above, p. 7.] But will not the Vedas, also, be in this way destitute of authority, like the chatter of a parrot, since they did not result from any knowledge of the correct meaning of the words of which they are made up? In reference to this, he says (51), 'The Vedas have a self-proving authority, since their inherent power is manifested.' The self-evidencing authority of the entire Vedas is established by the manifestation, or perception, in certain portions of them, viz., the 'spells' and the 'medical treatise,' etc., of that inherent power which they (the Vedas) possess of generating correct knowledge, and does not depend on its being shown that they (the Vedas) are founded on correct knowledge in their utterer, or on any other ground of that sort. And to this effect is the Nyāya Sūtra, that 'its authority is like the authority of the spells and the medical treatise.'" (See above, p. 80.)

In the 57th and following Sūtras of the same book, Kapila denies that sound has the character of sphoṭa, or that it is eternal. 57. 'Pratītyapratītibhyāṃ na sphoṭātmakah śabdaḥ' || *Pratyeka-varṇebhyo 'tiriktaṃ kalaśa ityādi-rūpam akhaṇḍam eka-padam sphoṭa iti yogair abhyupagamyate | kambu-grīvādy-avayavebhyo 'tirikto ghaṭādy-avayavīva | sa cha śabda-viśeṣo padākhya 'rtha-sphuṭikaranāt sphoṭa ity uchyate | sa śabdo 'prāmāṇikah | kutaḥ | pratītyapratītibhyām | sa śabdaḥ kim pratīyate na vā | ādye yena varṇa-samudāyena ānupurvī-viśeṣa-visiṣṭeṇa so 'bhivyajyate tasya eva artha-pratyāyakatvam astu | kim antargadunā tena | antye tv ajñāta-sphoṭasga nāsty artha-pratyāyana-śaktir iti vyarthā sphoṭa-kalpanā ity arthaḥ | Pūrvam vedānām nityatvam pratishiddham | idaniṃ varṇa-nityatvam api pratishedati || 58. " 'Sound has not the character of sphoṭa, from the dilemma that it must be either apparent or not apparent.' A modification of sound called sphoṭa, single, indivisible, distinct from individual letters, existing in the form of words like kalāśa (jar), distinguished also from parts of words like kambu-grīva (striped-neck), and forming a whole like the word ghaṭa (jar), is assumed by the Yogas. And this species of sound called a word (pada) is designated sphoṭa from its manifesting a meaning. But the existence of this form of sound is destitute of proof. Why? 'From the dilemma that it must be either apparent or not apparent.' Does this form of sound appear or not? If it appears, then let the power of disclosing a meaning [which is ascribed by our opponents to sphoṭa] be regarded as belonging to that collection of letters, arranged in a particular order, by which the supposed sphoṭa is manifested. What necessity is there for that superfluous sphoṭa? If, on the contrary, it does not appear, then that unknown sphoṭa can have no power of disclosing a meaning, and consequently it is useless to suppose that any such thing as sphoṭa exists.

"The eternity of the Vedas had been already denied. He now denies the eternity of letters also. 58. 'Sound is not eternal, since it is clear that it is a production.' The meaning is, that it is not reasonable to infer on the strength of the recognition of the letter G as the same that we knew before (see Mīmāṃsā Aphorisms i. 13; above, p. 56), that letters are eternal; since it is clear that G and other letters are produced, and therefore cannot be eternal. The recognition of these letters has reference to their being of the same kind as we have perceived before ; since otherwise we are landed in the absurdity that, because we recognize a jar or any other such object to be the same, it must therefore be eternal.

“ He expresses a doubt : 59. ‘ What we hear may be merely the manifestation of a previously existing thing, as a jar is manifested (not created) by the light of a lamp.’ (See Mīmāṃsā Aphorisms, i. 12, 13 ; above, p. 56.) Is it not the fact that it is merely the manifestation of language by sounds, etc., which begins to exist as an object of perception ? An illustration of such manifestation is that of a jar by means of a lamp.

“ He repels this doubt : 60. ‘ If the axiom that an effect exists in its cause be here intended, this is merely proving what is already admitted.’ If by manifestation is meant the relinquishment by any substance of its previous undeveloped state,⁴⁵ and the attainment of its present developed state, then we have merely the recognized principle of an effect virtually existing in its cause (see Sāṅkhya Kārika Aph. ix.) ; and as such eternity is truly predicable of all effects whatever, it is proving a thing already proved to assert it here. If, on the other hand, by manifestation be merely meant the perception of a thing actually existing, then we shall be involved in the absurdity of admitting that jars, etc., also are eternal, etc.”

SECT. IX.—Some further reasonings in support of the supernatural origin of the Veda, and distinction in point of authority between it and the Smṛitis or non-Vedic Śāstras as stated by the Commentators on the Taittirīya Yajur-veda, the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Manu, and the Vedānta, etc. ; difference of opinion between Sankara and Madhusūdana regarding the orthodoxy of Kapila and Kaṇāda.

I.—The Nyāya-mālā-vistara.—I shall begin this section with an extract on the supernatural origin of the Veda from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, a summary of the doctrines of the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā of “[Verses] ‘Is the word of the Veda of human origin or not? It must be human, since (1) it bears the names of Kāthaka, etc., and (2) has the characters of a sentence, like other sentences. No; for (1) the names arose from particular persons being teachers of the Vedas, and (2) the objection that the Vedic precepts have the characters of common sentences is refuted by other considerations. For the Veda must be supernatural, since it has never been known to have had a maker.’ [Comment] It is objected (1) that the names Kāthaka, Kauthuma, Taittirīyaka, etc., are applied in common usage to the different Vedas; and the taddhita affix by which these appellations are formed, denotes ‘uttered by’ [Kātha, Kuthumi, and Tittiri] (comp. Pānini iv. 3, 101). Such being the case, it is clear that these parts of the Vedas are of human origin [or derived from a person, puruṣa], like the

Mahābhārata, which is styled Vaiyāsika, because it was uttered by Vyāsa, etc. And further (2), the sentences of the Veda, being subject to different interpretations, are of human origin, because they have the properties of a sentence, like the sentences of Kālidāsa, etc. To this we reply (1), the name applied to any Veda originates in the fact that the sage whose name it bears, was an agent in transmitting the study of that Veda. But (2) in the books of Kālidāsa and others, the authors are discoverable [from the notices] at the end of each section. Now if the Veda also were of human composition, the author of it would, in like manner, be discoverable; but such is not the case. Hence, the objection that the Veda partakes of the nature of common sentences is refuted by opposing considerations. Consequently the Veda is superhuman. And such being the case, as we cannot suspect in it any fallibility occasioned by the defects of human reason, the preceptive texts of the Veda are demonstrated to be authoritative in questions of duty."

II.—Vedārtha prakāśa.—The verses just quoted are repeated in the Vedārtha-prakāśa of Mādhava on the Taittirīya Sanhitā (p. 26), with a various reading at the beginning of the third line, viz., 'samākhyānam pravachanāt' instead of 'samākhyā 'dhyāpakatvena.' The comment by which the verses are explained in the same work, is as follows:—*Vālmikīyaṃ Vaiyāsikīyam ityādi-samākhyānād Rāmāyana-Bhāratādīkaṃ yathā pauruṣeyaṃ tathā Kāṭhakaṃ Kauthumaṃ Taittirīyam ityādi-samākhyānād vedāḥ pauruṣeyaḥ | kiñcha veda-vākyaṃ pauruṣeyaṃ vākyaivāt Kālidāsādi-vākya-vad iti chet | maivam | sampradāya-pravṛtīyā samākhyopapatteḥ | Vākyaiva-hetus tv anupalabdhi-viruddha-kālātyayāpadishṭaḥ | Yathā Vyāsa-Vālmikī-prabhṛtīyas tad-grantha-nirmānāvasare kaiśchid upalabdhaḥ | anyair apy avichhinna-sampradāyena upalabhyante | na tathā veda-kartā puruṣaḥ kaiśchid upalabdhaḥ | pratyuta vedasya nityatvaṃ śruti-smṛitibhyāṃ pūrvam udāhṛitam | Paramātmā tu veda-kartā 'pi na laukika-puruṣaḥ | tasmāt kartṛi-doshābhāvād nāsty aprāmānya-śaṅkā. " It may be said (I) that* as the Rāmāyana, the Mahābhārata, and other such books, are regarded as the works of men from the epithets Vālmīkiya (composed by Vālmiki), Vaiyāsikīya (composed by Vyāsa), etc., which they bear, so too the Veda must be of human origin, since it is called by the appellations of Kāṭhaka, Kauthuma, and Taittirīya, etc.; and further (2), that the word of the Veda must be human, because it possesses the properties of a common sentence. But these objections are unfounded, for (1) the appellation of any part of the Veda is derived from some sage who was an agent in transmitting the study of it; and (2) the objection about the Veda having the properties of a common sentence is opposed to the fact that no author was ever perceived, and is refuted by the length of time [during which the Veda has been received as superhuman]. For though Vyāsa and Vālmiki, etc., when employed in the composition of their respective works, were perceived by some persons to be so engaged, and are known by others also [in after ages] to be the authors, from the existence of an unbroken tradition to that effect;—no human author of the Veda has ever been perceived. On the contrary, we have formerly shown that the eternity of the Veda is declared both by itself and by the Smṛiti. And even if the supreme Spirit be the maker of it; still he is not a mundane person, and consequently, as no defect exists in the maker, there is no reason to suspect fallibility in his work.”

I do not know how it has happened that these commentators have taken no notice of an obvious objection which may be raised to the validity of this reasoning, viz., that the hymns of the Rik and other Vedas are all set down in the Anukramaṇis, or indices to those works, as being uttered by particular rishis; the rishis being, in fact, there defined as those whose words the hymns were—yasya vākyaṃ sa ṛishih. (See Colebrooke’s Misc. Ess. i. 26, or p. 12 of W. and N.’s ed.) Though, however, this objection has not been noticed in any of the preceding passages, an answer has been provided to it in the well-known assertion of the orthodox Indian writers that the rishis did not compose, but only saw the hymns and other parts of the Vedas, which had in reality pre-existed from eternity.

Thus, in the Vedārtha-prakāsa on the Taittirīya Sanhitā, p. 11, it is said: *Atīndriyārtha-draśtāra ṛishayah | Teshām veda-draśhṛitvaṁ smaryate | Yugānte 'ntarhitān*⁴⁷ Vedān setihāsān maharshayah | Lebhire tapasā pūrvam anujñātāḥ svayambhuvā. (Mahābhārata, Śāntiparva, verse 7,660. See above, p. 73.)

“The rishis were seers of things beyond the reach of the bodily senses. The fact of their seeing the Vedas is recorded in the Smṛiti: ‘The great rishis, empowered by Svayambhū, formerly obtained, through devotion, the Vedas and the Itihāsas which had disappeared at the end of the [preceding] Yuga.’”

So, too, Manu (as already quoted, Part First, p. 142) says, Prajāpatir idam śāstraṁ tapasāivāśṛijāt prabhuḥ | Tathāiva vedān ṛishayas tapasā pratipedire. “Prajāpati created this Śāstra (the Institutes of Manu) by devotion; and by devotion the rishis obtained the Vedas.”

See also the passages from the Nirukta in pp. 174 ff. and 205 of the Second Part of this work.

A distinct line of demarcation is generally drawn by the more critical Indian writers between the Vedas and all other classes of Indian Śāstras, however designated. The former are considered to be infallible, and to possess an independent authority; while the latter derive their authority from the Veda alone, and (in theory) are infallible guides only in so far as they coincide with the Veda. This will be clear from the following passages.

I.—Nyāya-mālā-vistara.—The first text which I will adduce has been already quoted in the Second Part of this work, but I shall repeat it here for facility of reference. It is from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara i. 3, 24. Baudhāyanāpastambāśvalāyanahātyāyanādi-nāmāṅkitāḥ kalpasūtrādi-granthā nigama-nirukta-shadāṅga-granthā Manv-ādi-smṛitayaś cha apaurusheyāḥ | dharmabuddhi-janakatvāt | veda-vat | na cha mūla-pramāṇa-sāpex-

atvena veda-vaishamyam iti śaṅkanīyam | utpannāyā buddheḥ svataḥ-prāmāṇyāṅgikāreṇa nirapexatvāt || Maivam | uktānumānasya kālātyayāpadishṭatvāt | Baudhāyana-sūtram Āpastamba-sūtram ity evam puruṣa-namnā te granthā uchyante | na cha Kāṭhahādī-samākhyā-vat pravachana-nimittatvaṁ yuktam | tad-grantha-nirmāṇa-kāle tadānīntanaiḥ kaiśchid upalabdhatvāt | tachcha avichhinna-pārampariyena anuvarttate | tataḥ Kālidāsādi-grantha-vat paurusheyāḥ | tathāpi veda-mūlatvāt pramāṇam || . . . kalpasya vedatvaṁ nādyāpi siddham | hintu prayatnena sādhanīyam | na cha tat sādhayitum śakyam | paurusheyatvasya samākhyayā tat-karttur upalambhena cha sādhitatvāt.

“It may be said that the Kalpa Sūtras and other works designated by the names of Baudhayana, Āpastamba, Aśvalayana, Kātyāyana, etc., and the Nigama, Nirukta, and six Vedāngas, together with the Smṛitis of Manu and others, are superhuman, because they impart a knowledge of duty, as the Vedas do; and that they should not be suspected of inferiority to the Vedas on the ground that they depend upon a primary authority, since the knowledge which they impart is independent, because it is admitted to be self-evidencing. But this view is incorrect, for the inference in question is refuted by the length of time [during which these works have been recognized as human compositions]. The books in question are called by the names of men, as ‘the Sūtras of Baudhāyana,’ ‘the Sūtras of Āpastamba;’ and these designations cannot correctly be said to originate in the oral transmission of the works by those teachers whose names they bear (as is really the case in regard to the Kāthaka and other parts of the Veda), for it was known to some of the contemporaries of these men, at the time when they were composing these Sūtras, Smṛitis, etc., that they were so engaged; and this knowledge has descended by unbroken tradition. Hence the books in question are, like the works of Kālidāsa and others, of human origin. Nevertheless, they possess authority, as being founded on the Veda.” . . . The following additional remarks represent the opinion of the Guru (Prabhakara) on the same question : " It is not yet proved that the Kalpa Sūtras possess the character of the Veda ; it would require great labour to prove it ; and, in fact, it is impossible to prove it. For the human origin of these books is established by the names which they bear, and by their being observed to have had authors."

II.—Kullūka.—The same thing is admitted by Kullūka, the commentator on Manu, who (in his remarks on i. 1) thus defines the relation of his author to the Vedas : Paurusheyatve 'pi Manu-vākyānām avigīta-mahājana-parigrahāt śrutyupagrahāchcha veda-mūlakatayā prāmāṇyam | Tathā cha chhāndogya-brāhmaṇe śrūyate ' Manur vai yat kiñchid avadat tad bheshajam bheshajā-tāyāḥ' iti | Vṛihaspatir apy āha ' Vedārthopanibandhṛitvāt prādhānyaṃ hi Manoh smṛitam | Manvartha-viparītā tu yā smṛitiḥ sā na śasyate | Tāvach chhāstrāṇi śobhante tarka-vyākaraṇāni cha | Dharmārtha-moxopadeshtā Manur yāvanna drīśyate' | Mahābhārate 'py uktam ' Purāṇam Mānavo dharmah sāṅgo vedaś chikitsitam | Ājñā-siddhāni chatvāri na hantavyāni hetu-bhikḥ' | virodhi Bauddhādi-tarkair na hantavyāni | anukālastu mīmāṃsādi-tarkaḥ pravarttanīya eva | ata eva vaxyati ' ārshaṃ dharmopadeśāṅcha veda-śāstrāvirodhiṇā | yas tarheṇānusan-dhatte sa dharmāṃ veda netaraḥ' iti. " Though the Institutes of Manu had a human author, still, as their reception by illustrious men of unimpeached [orthodoxy], and their conformity to the Veda, prove that they are based upon the latter, they are authoritative. Accordingly it is recorded in the Chhāndogya Brahmana that, ' Whatever Manu said is a medicine of remedial efficacy.' And Vṛihaspati says : ' As Manu expounds the sense of the Veda, he is traditionally celebrated as pre-eminent. But that smṛiti which is contrary to the sense of Manu, is not approved. Books [on law ?], logic, and grammar are all eclipsed as soon as Manu, our instructor in duty, and in the means of attaining both earthly prosperity, and final liberation, is beheld.' And it is said in the Mahābhārata : ' The Puranas, the institutes of Manu, the Veda with its appendages, and treatises on medicine, these four, which are established by [divine] command, are not to be assailed by rationalistic arguments ;' that is, they are not to be attacked by hostile reasonings, such as those of the Bauddhas. But friendly arguments, such as those of the Mīmānsakas, are to be employed. And accordingly, we shall find below (Manu xii. 106) that he says, ' the man who investigates the injunctions of the rishis, and the rules of duty by reasoning which is agreeable to the Veda, he, and he only, is acquainted with duty.' " (See above, p. 13, note 10.)

III.—Nyāya-mālā-vistara.—But the precepts of the smṛiti are not considered useless or superfluous. On the contrary, an authority is attributed to them corresponding to the antiquity, elevated position, and sacred character of their authors. Thus the author of the Nyāya-mālā-vistara says (i. 3, 3): Vimatā smṛitir veda-mūlā | vaidika-manvādi-pranīta-smṛititvāt | upanayanādhyayanādi-smṛiti-vat | na cha vaiyarthyaṁ śaṅkanīyam | asmad-ādīnām pratyaxeshu pāroxeshu nānā vedeshu viprakṛīnasya anuśṭheyārthasya ekatra saṅkīpyamānatvāt. "The variously understood smṛiti is founded on the Veda, because the traditions, such as those regarding investiture, study, etc., have been compiled by Vedic men, such as Manu and others. Nor is it to be surmised that the smṛiti is useless, since it throws together in a condensed form a variety of injunctions regarding matters to be observed, which are scattered through different Vedas, both such as are visible and such as are invisible to us." (This last expression appears to refer to the supposition that some parts of the Veda which Manu and others had before them when compiling their own works, have now been lost. See Müller's Anc. Sans. Lit. pp. 103-107.)

Accordingly the smṛitis have an authority superior to that founded merely on the practice of learned men of modern date derived from their own private study of the Vedas. Thus the Nyāya-mālā-vistara says (i. 3, 19): Na hi idānīntanāḥ śiṣṭāḥ Manv-ādi-vad deśa-kāla-viprakṛīṣṭam vedaṁ divya-jñānena sāx-ātkarttuṁ śaknuvanti yena śiṣṭāchārō mūla-vedam anumāpayet. "For learned men of the present day do not possess the power, which Manu and others had, of placing before their minds, through divine knowledge, the Veda which was far removed from them both in place and time, so as to justify us in regarding the practice of these moderns as a sufficient ground for inferring the existence of a Veda as its foundation."

But as learned men, in any particular country or at any particular time, may be able to consult some smṛiti which authorizes their particular observances, "these observances may serve as ground for inferring the existence of some smṛiti on which they are founded, but not for inferring a Veda: (tasmāch chhishṭā-chāreṇa smṛitir anumātuṃ śakyate na tu śrutih). But a smṛiti which is thus merely inferred to exist is set aside by any visibly existing smṛiti of contrary import: (anumitā cha smṛitir viruddhayaḥ pratyaxayā smṛityā bādhyate)."

IV.—Śankara.—The above passages, by assuming that Manu and other eminent sages had the power of consulting Vedic texts now no longer accessible, make them practically almost infallible. The same view is taken by Śankara Āchāryya. (See, however, the passage quoted from him above, in note 31, p. 45.) In answer to the remark of a Mīmāṃsaka objector stated in the comment on the Brahma Sūtras i. 3, 32, that the Itihāsas and Puranas, being of human origin, have only a derived and secondary authority ('itihāsa-purānam api paurusheyatvāt pramāṇāntara-mūlatām ākāṅxate'), Śankara argues in his explanation of the following Sūtra (i. 3, 33) that they have an independent foundation: Itihāsa-purānam api vyākhyātena mārgena sambhavad mantrārthavāda-mūlatvāt prabhavati devatā-vigrahādi prapañchayitum | pratyaxa-mūlam api sambhavati | bhavati hi asmākam apratyaxam api chīrāntanānām pratyaxam | tathā cha Vyāsūdayo devatābhikḥ pratyaxaṃ vyavaharantī smar-yate | yastu brūyād idānīntanānām iva pūrveshām api nāsti devādibhir vyavaharttuṃ sāmāthyam iti sa jagad-vaichitryam pratishedet | idānīm iva cha na anyadā 'pi sāvabhaumaḥ xatriyo 'stīti brūyāt | tataścha rājasūyādi-chodanā uparundhyāt | idānīm iva cha kālāntare 'py avyavasthīta-prāyān varṇāśrama-dhar-

mān pratijānīta tataścha vyavasthā-vidhāyi śāstram anarthakam kuryāt | Tasmād dharmotkarsha-vaśāt chirantanā devādibhiḥ pratyaxam vyajahrur iti ślishyate | api cha smaranti 'svādhyāyādishṭa-devatā-samprayoga' ityādi | yogo 'py animādy-aiśvarya-prāpti-phalakah smaryamāno na śakyate sāhasa-mātreṇa pratyākhyātum | śrutiścha yoga-māhātmyam pratyākhyāpayati | 'prithvy-ap-tejo'-nila-khe samutthite pañchātmake yoga-guṇe pravritte | na tasyo rogo na jarā na mṛityuḥ prāptasya yogād nimisham śarīram' iti | rishīnām api mantra-brāhmaṇa-darśinām sāmarmhyaṁ na asmadīyena sāmarmhyena upamātum yuk-tam | tasmāt samālam itihāsa-purāṇam. “The Itihāsas and Puranas also, having originated in the way which has been explained, have power, as being based on the hymns and arthavādas, to evince the corporeality, etc., of the gods. It is also reasonable to suppose that they are founded upon intuition. For there were things palpable through intuition to the ancients, though they are not thus palpable to us.⁴⁸ Accordingly it is recorded in the smṛiti that Vyāsa and others associated face to face with the gods.⁴⁹ Any man who should maintain that the ancients, like his own contemporaries, were destitute of power thus to associate with superhuman beings like the gods, would be denying all variety in the history of the world. Such a person would in like manner affirm that as now there is no kshatriya possessed of universal sovereignty, so neither was there ever such a prince; and would thus impugn the scriptural injunc-

“Immortal gods, not unfamiliar, then

Their feasts and converse shared with mortal men.”

And Herodotus writes of the Egyptians, ii. 144: Τὸ δὲ πρότερον τῶν ἀνδρῶν τούτων θεοὺς εἶναι τοὺς ἐν Ἀιγύπτῳ ἄρχοντας, δικέοντας ἅμα τοῖσι ἀνθρώποισι. “And [the Egyptian priests said] that before these men the gods were the rulers in Egypt, dwelling together with men.”

tions regarding the rājasūya sacrifice [which was only to be performed by a universal monarch]. He would also allege that in former times, as now, the duties of castes and of orders were scarcely at all in force, and would thus render fruitless the scriptures by which the rules relating to them are ordained. By these considerations it is intimated that the ancients, in consequence of their eminent holiness, were admitted to associate immediately with the gods, etc. And the smṛiti speaks of 'contact with the gods made known by sacred study,' etc. Again, when the smṛiti talks of devotion resulting in the acquisition of superhuman faculties such as minuteness, this assertion cannot have been made through mere audacity [i.e., it must have had some good foundation]. The Veda, too, declares the immense power of devotion in these words: 'When the fivefold influence of devotion, arising in the elements of earth, water, fire, air, and ether, has begun to act, and a man has attained an ethereal [?] body, he is no longer affected by disease, decay, or death.' And it is unreasonable to estimate by the analogy of our own power, the power of the rishis, the seers of the Vedic hymns and brahmanas. Wherefore the Itihāsas and Puranas have a foundation.'"

Śankara does not, however, treat all the ancients in this way. Like many other systematizers, he finds no difficulty in rejecting or explaining away any authorities which come into conflict with his views. It is thus that he deals with Kapila, the author of the Sāṅkhya. That eminent sage is thus spoken of in the Svetāśvatara Upanishad v. 2: Yo yoniṁ yoniṁ adhitishṭhaty eko viśvāni rūpāni yonīścha sarvāḥ | ṛishim prasūtam Kapilam yas tam agre jñānair bibhartti jāyamañcha paśyeta. "The god who alone superintends every source of production and all forms, who formerly nourished with various knowledge his son the rishi Kapila, and beheld him at his birth."⁵⁰

In his comment on the Brahma Sūtras ii. 1, 1, Śankara remarks on this passage of the Upanishad as follows:—Yā tu śrutiḥ Kapilasya jñānātīsayam darśayanti pradarśitā na tayā śruti-viruddham api Kāpilam mataṁ śraddhātuṁ śakyam Kāpilam iti śruti-sāmānya mātratvād anyasya cha Kapilasya sagara-putrānām prataptur Vāsudeva-nāmnah smaraṇāt | anyārthadarśanasya cha prāpti-rahitasya asādhakatvāt | Bhavati cha anyā Manur mōhātīyam prakhyāpayanti śrutir 'yad vai hiṅcha Manur avadat tad bheshajam' iti | Manunā cha 'sarva-bhūteshu chātmanāṁ sarva-bhūtāni chātmani | samam paśyann ātma-yājī svārājyam adhigachchhati' iti sarvātmatva-darśanam prāsāmsatā Kāpilam mataṁ nindyate iti gamyate | Kapilo hi na sarvātmatva-darśanam anumanyate ātma-bhedābhyupagamāt | ataścha ātma-bheda-kalpanayā 'pi Kapilasya tantrasya veda-viruddhatvaṁ vedānusāri-Manu-vachana-virudhatvaṅcha na keralaṁ svatantra-prakṛiti-parikalpanayā eveti siddham | “And the Vedic text which has been pointed out, showing the pre-eminence of Kapila's knowledge, cannot be a warrant for believing the doctrine of Kapila, though contrary to the Veda, since the word Kapila has, in this text, a general sense [applicable to others besides the author of the Sāṅkhya], and another Kapila called Vāsudeva, the consumer of Sagara's sons, also, is mentioned in the smṛiti; and since a darśana of a different import, devoid of benefit [?], has no power of proving anything. There is, besides, another text of the Veda which sets forth the eminent dignity of Manu in these terms, 'Whatever Manu said is medicine.' And Manu,—when he employs the words, 'He who, with impartial eye, beholds himself in all beings, and all beings in himself, thus sacrificing his own personality, becomes identified with the self-refulgent Being;' and, by saying this, commends the tenet that everything is one with the supreme Spirit—must be understood as censuring Kapila's doctrine. For Kapila does not assent to the identity of Brahma and the universe, for we know that he holds a diversity of souls.” (After quoting one passage from the Mahābhārata, and another from the Veda, to prove that Kapila is wrong, Śankara proceeds): "Hence it is proved that Kapila's system is at variance with the Veda and with the words of Manu, who follows the Veda, not only in supposing an independent Prakriti (nature), but also in supposing a diversity of souls."

IV.—See also Śankara's commentary on the Taittirīya Upanishad, Bib. Ind. vii. pp. 136, 137, where he says: Kāpila-kāṇād-ādi-tarka-śāstra-virodha iti chet | na | teshām mūlābhāve veda-virodhe cha bhrānti-yopapatteḥ | "If it be objected that this is contrary to the rationalistic doctrines of Kapila and Kanāda [and therefore wrong], I answer no, since these doctrines are proved to be erroneous, as having no foundation, and as being in opposition to the Veda."

V.—His remarks on a passage of the Praśna Upanishad are as follows, and afford a curious specimen of the contemptuous manner in which this orthodox Vedantist treats the heretical Sāṅkhyas, etc. (Praśna Up. vi. 4; Bib. Ind. viii. 244):—Sāṅkhyāstu avidyā-dhyāropitam eva puruṣe kartṛitvaṁ kriyā-kāraṁ phalaṅcha iti kalpayitrā āgama-vāhyatvāt punas tatas trasyantaḥ paramārthata eva bhokṛitvam puruṣasya ichchhanti | tattvāntaraṅcha pradhānam puruṣāt paramārtha-vastu-bhūtam eva kalpayanto 'nya-tārkika-kṛita-buddhi-vishayāḥ santo vihanyante | Tathā itare tārkikāḥ sāṅkhyair ity evam paraspara-viruddhārtha-kalpanāta āmishārthina iva prāṇino 'nyonyaṁ viruddhamānā artha-darśitvāt paramārtha-tattvāt taddūram eva apakṛishyante | atas tanmatam anādritya vedāntārtha-tattvam ekatva-darśanam prati ādaravanto mumukṣavaḥ syur iti tārkika-mate dosha-darśanam kiñchid uchyate 'smābhir na tu tārkika-tātparyeṇa | "The followers of the Sāṅkhya maintain that the functions of action, causation, and the enjoyment of reward become erroneously attributed to the soul (puruṣa) in consequence of supervening ignorance; but as this doctrine differs from that of Scripture, they become afraid of it, and seek to ascribe to the soul enjoyment in the proper sense. And imagining another principle distinct from soul, viz., Pradhāna (or nature), which they regard as substance in the proper sense, they become the objects of criticism by other rationalists, and are crushed. In consequence of these contradictory conceptions of the Sāṅkhyasts, other free-thinkers again begin to quarrel with them like animals [dogs he would no doubt have liked to say] fighting for flesh; and thus, from their having some selfish object [?] in view, they are all drawn away to a distance from the essential truth. Wherefore let men, disregarding their tenets, seek for final liberation by paying honour to the principles of the Vedantic doctrine, which maintains the unity of all being. We have thus pointed out something of the errors of the rationalists, but without any reference to the rationalists personally.”

VI.—In thus depreciating Kapila, Śankara is in direct opposition to the Bhāgavata Purana (which, however, is considered to be a work of later date⁵¹), in which the author of the Sāṅkhya is spoken of with the greatest reverence. Thus in Bhāg. Pur. i. 3, 10, he is described as the fifth incarnation of Vishnu. Pañchamaḥ Kapilo nāma siddheśaḥ kāla-viplutam | provāchāsūraye sāṅkhyāṁ tattva-grāma-vinirṇayam | “In his fifth manifestation, he [in the form of] Kapila, lord of saints, declared to Āsuri the Sāṅkhya which defines the collection of principles, and which had been lost through the lapse of time.”

VII.—And again, in Bhāg. Pur. ix. 8, 12, 13, Kapila is made the subject of eulogy. A legend narrates that the sixty thousand sons of King Sagara, conceiving Kapila to be the robber of a horse which had been carried away from their sacrifice, advanced to slay him, when they were burnt up by fire issuing from his body. The author of the Purana, however, denies that this was in any degree owing to passion on the part of the sage: Na sādhu-vādo muni-kopa-bharjitā nṛpendra-putrā iti sattva-dhāmani | kathāṁ tamo roshamayāṁ vibhāvyaṭe jagat-pavitratmani kṛe rajo bhuvāḥ | yasyeritā sāṅkhyamayī dṛiḍheha naur yayā mumuxus tarate durtatyayam | bhavārṇavam mṛityupathāṁ vipāśchītaḥ parātma-bhūtasya katham prithangmatikḥ | “It is not an assertion befitting a good man to say that the king's sons were burnt up by the wrath of the sage : for how is it conceivable that the darkness (tamas) of anger should reside in the abode of goodness (sattva) and sanctifier of the world ; or that the dust (rajas) of the earth should ascend into the sky ? How could that sage by whom the strong ship of the Sāṅkhya was launched, on which the man seeking emancipation crosses the ocean of existence, hard to be traversed, and leading to death—how could he entertain the distinction of friend and foe [and so treat any one as an enemy] ?”

It is not necessary for me to quote any further passages in praise of the author of the Sāṅkhya. There is a great deal about this system in the Mahābhārata, Śāntiparva, verses 11,037 ff. See Colebrooke's Essays i. 236 (p. 149 of W. and N.'s ed.) ; Wilson's Vishnu Purana, pref. pp. lix, lx, and text, pp. 9 ff. with notes ; Bhāgavata Purana iii. chapters 24-30 ; Weber's Ind. Stud. passim ; Dr. Rœr's Introduction to Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, Bibl. Ind. xv. 35 ff. ; and Dr. Hall's Sāṅkhya Pravachana Bhāshya, Bibl. Ind. pref. pp. 5, note, 18, note.

We have thus seen that a distinct line of demarcation is drawn by the most accurate and critical of the Indian writers, between the śruti, which they define to be superhuman and independent, and the smṛiti, which they regard as of human origin, and dependent for its authority on its conformity with the śruti. Śankara, indeed, as we have also observed, goes very nearly so far as to assign an independent foundation to the smṛitis ; but he confines this distinction to such of these works as coincide in doctrine with the śruti or Veda, according to his own Vedantic interpretation of its principles, while all other speculators are denounced by him as heterodox. It is, however, clear from the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, the Mahābhārata, the Bhagavad Gītā, the Vishnu, and the Bhāgavata Puranas, etc., that the doctrines of the Sāṅkhya must have been very prevalent in ancient times, and that Śankara, when he condemned them as erroneous, must have done so in the face of many powerful opponents.

It is not necessary for me here to inquire with any accuracy what the relation was in which the different philosophical systems stood to each other in former ages. It may suffice to say that the more philosophical adherents of each—of the Vedānta, the Sāṅkhya, the Nyāya, etc.—must, according to all appearance, have maintained their respective principles with the utmost earnestness and tenacity, and could not have admitted that any of the rival systems was superior to their own in any particular. It is impossible to study the Sūtras of the several schools, and come to any other conclusion. The more popular systems of the Purānas, on the other hand, blended various tenets of the different systems syncretically together. In modern times the superior orthodoxy of the Vedānta seems to be generally admitted. But even those who hold this opinion refuse to follow the example of Śāṅkara in denouncing the founders of the rival schools as heretical. On the contrary, they regard them all as inspired Munis, who, by adapting their doctrines to the capacities or tendencies of different students, have paved the way for the ultimate reception of the Vedāntic system. Such is the view taken in the Prasthāna-bheda of Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, who thus writes (Weber's Indische Studien, i. 23): Sarveshāṅcha saṅxepena trividha eva prasthāna-bhedaḥ | tatra ārambha-vāda ekaḥ | parināma-vādo dvitīyaḥ | vivartta-vādas tṛtīyaḥ | pārthivāpya-taijasa-vāyavyāś' chaturvidhāḥ paramāṅavo dvyānukādī-krameṇa brahmāṅḍa-paryantaṁ jagad ārambhante | asad eva kāryyaṁ kāraka-vyāpārād utpadyate iti prathamā tārkkikāṅām mīmāṅsakāṅāṅcha | sattva-rajas-tamo-guṅātmaḥ pradhānam eva mahad-ahankārādi-krameṇa jagad-ākāreṇa parinamate | pūrvam api sūxma-rūpeṇa sad eva kāryyaṁ kāraṇa-vyāpāreṇa abhivyajyate iti dvitīyaḥ paxaḥ Sāṅkhya-Yoga-Pātaṅjala-Pāśu-patāṅām | Brahmanāḥ parināmo jagad iti Vaiṣṇavāṅām | sva-prakāśa-paramāṅandādvitīyam Brahma sva-māyā-vaśād mithyāiva jagad-ākāreṇa kalpate iti tṛtīyaḥ paxo Brahma-vādināṁ | sarveshāṅ prasthāna-karttṛiṅām munīṅām vivartta-vāda-paryavasānena advitīyc Parameśvare eva pratipādye

The first doctrine is that of a commencement of the world; the second is that of an evolution; the third is that of an illusion. The first theory, that of the logicians and Mīmāṃsakas, is this: atoms of four descriptions—earthy, aqueous, igneous, and atmospheric—beginning with compounds of two atoms, and ending in the egg of Brahma (the world), originate the universe: and effects previously non-existing, come into being from the action of a causer. The second theory, that of the Sāṅkhyas, Yogas, Pātanjalas, and Pāśūpatas, is that Pradhāna (or Prakṛiti = nature), consisting of the three gunas (qualities), sattva, rajas, and tamas, is evolved, through the successive stages of mahat (intellect), and ahankāra (consciousness), etc., in the form of the world; and that effects, which had previously existed in a subtle form, are [merely] manifested by the action of their cause. Another form of the theory of evolution is that of the Vaishnavas [the Rāmānujas], who hold the universe to be an evolution of Brahma. The third view, that of the Vedantists (Brahma-vādīs) is, that Brahma, the self-resplendent, the supremely happy, and the one sole essence, assumes, unreally, the form of the world through the influence of his own illusion (Māyā).

The ultimate scope of all the Munis, authors of these different systems, is to support the theory of illusion, and their only design is to establish the existence of one Supreme God, the sole essence; for these Munis could not be mistaken [as some of them must have been, if they were not all of one opinion, or, as those of them must have been who did not hold Vedantic principles], since they were omniscient. But as they saw that men, addicted to the pursuit of external objects, could not all at once penetrate into the highest truth, they held out to them a variety of theories, in order that they might not fall into atheism. Misunderstanding the object which the Munis thus had in view, and representing that they even designed to propound doctrines contrary to the Vedas, men have come to regard the specific doctrines of these several schools with preference, and thus become adherents of a variety of systems. Thus all has been satisfactorily stated."

The view here taken by Madhusūdana of the ultimate coincidence in principle of all the different schools of Hindu philosophy, however mutually hostile in appearance, seems, as I have remarked, to be that which is commonly entertained by modern Pandits. (See Dr. Ballantyne's Synopsis of Science, advertisement, p. iv.) This system of compromise, however, is clearly a deviation from the older doctrine; and it practically abolishes the distinction in point of authority between the Vedas and the smṛitis, Darśanas, etc. For if the Munis, authors of the six Darśanas, were omniscient and infallible, they must stand on the same level with the Vedas, which can be nothing more.

To return, however, from this discussion regarding the hostility of Śankara to the adherents of the Sāṅkhya and other rationalistic schools, and the opinions of later authors concerning the founders of those several systems. The distinction drawn by the Indian commentators quoted in this section between the superhuman Veda and its human appendages, the Kalpa-sūtras, etc., as well as the smṛitis, is not borne out by the texts which I have cited above (pp. 7, 18) from the Vrihad Āranyaka, and Mundaka Upanishads. By classing together the Vedic Sanhitās, and the other works enumerated in the same passages, the authors of the Upanishads seem to place them all upon an equal footing. If the one set of works are superhuman, it may fairly be argued that the others are so likewise. According to the Mundaka Upanishad, neither of them (if we except only the Vedantas or Upanishads) can be placed in the highest rank, as they equally inculcate a science which is only of secondary importance.

As, however, Śankara, in his comment on the text from the Vṛihad Āranyaka Upanishad, maintains that the whole of the works enumerated, excepting the Sanhitās of the four Vedas, are in reality portions of the Brahmanas, it will be necessary to quote his remarks, which are as follows (Bibl. Ind. ii. 855 ff.):

. . . Niśvasitam iva niśvasitam | yathā aprayatnendīva puruṣha-niśvāso bhavaty evam vā | are kiṃ tad niśvasitaṃ tato jātam ity uchyate | Yad ṛigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo 'tharvāngirasaś chaturvidham mantra-jātam | itihāsa ity Ūrvaśi-Purūravaso saṃvādādīr ' Ūrvaśi ha apsarā' ityādi brāhmaṇam eva | purānam 'asad vā idam agre āsīd' ityādi | vidyā devajana-vidyā 'vedaḥ so 'yam' ityādīḥ | upanishadaḥ 'priyam ity etad upāsīta' ityādīyāḥ | ślokā 'brāhmaṇa-prabhavā mantrās tad ete ślokā' ity ādayaḥ | sūtrāṇi vastu-saṅgraha-vākyaṇi vede yathā 'ātmā ity eva upāsīta' ityādīni | anuvyākhyānāni mantra-vivaraṇāni | vyākhyānāni arthavādāḥ | . . . evam aṣṭavidham brāhmaṇam | evam mantra-brāhmaṇayor eva grahaṇam | niyata-rachanārato vidyamānasyaiva vedasya abhivyaktiḥ puruṣha-niśvāsa-vat | nacha puruṣha-buddhi-prayatna-pūrvakaḥ | atah pramānam nirapeṣa eva svārthe | . . . tena vedasya aprāmānyam āśaṅkate | tad-āśaṅkā-nirṛitty-artham idam uktam | puruṣha-niśvāsa-vad aprayatnotthitavāt pramānaṃ vedo na yathā 'nyo grantha iti |

“ ‘His breathing’ means, as it were his breathing, or it denotes the absence of effort, as in the case of a man’s breathing. We are now told what that breathing was which was produced from him. It was the four classes of mantras (hymns), those of the Rik, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvāngirases (Ātharvana); Itihāsa (or narrative), such as the dialogue between Ūrvaśi and Purūravas, viz., the passage in the Brahmana beginning ‘Ūrvaśi the Apsaras,’ etc. [Ś. P. Br. p. 855]; Purana, such as ‘this was originally non-existent,’ etc.; Vidyā (knowledge), the knowledge of the gods, as ‘this is the Veda,’ etc.; Upanishads, such as ‘this is beloved, let him reverence it,’ etc.; Ślokas, such as those here mentioned, ‘the mantras are the sources of the Brahmanas, on which subject there are these ślokas,’ etc.; Sūtras (aphorisms) occurring in the Veda which condense the substance of doctrines, as 'it is the soul, let him adore,' etc.; Anuvyākhyānas, or interpretations of the mantras; Vyākhyānas, or explanatory remarks." The commentator adds alternative explanations of the two last terms, and then proceeds: "Here, therefore, eight sorts of texts occurring in the Brahmanas are referred to; and consequently the passage before us embraces merely mantras and Brahmanas. The manifestation of the Veda, which already existed in a fixed form of composition, is compared to the breathing of a person: the Veda was not the result of effort proceeding from the conscious intelligence of any individual. Consequently, as proof in respect of itself, it is independent of everything else."

Śankara terminates his comment on this passage by intimating that the author of the Upanishad means to remove a doubt regarding the authority of the Veda, arising apparently from its unreality, if it were regarded as created by a conscious effort of Brahma, and therefore as distinct from him, the only really existing being, and concludes that "the Veda, unlike all other books, is authoritative, because it was produced without any effort of will, like a man's breathing." (See Sāṅkhya Sūtras, v. 50; above p. 83.)

This attempt to explain the whole of the eight classes of works enumerated in the Upanishad as nothing else than parts of the Brahmanas, cannot be regarded as altogether satisfactory, since some of them, such as the Sūtras, have always been referred to a distinct class of writings, which are regarded as uninspired (see Müller's Anc. Ind. Lit. pp. 75, 86); and the Itihāsas and Puranas had in all probability become a distinct class of writings at the period when the Upanishad was composed. And Śankara's explanation is rendered more improbable if we compare with this passage the other from the Mundaka Upanishad, i. 1, 5, already quoted above (p. 18), where it is said, "the inferior science consists of the Rik, Yajush, Sāma, and Atharva Vedas, accentuation (śikṣā), ritual prescriptions (kalpa), grammar, commentary (nirukta), prosody (chhandas), and astronomy.”⁵² Here various appendages of the Vedas, which later writers expressly distinguish from the Vedas themselves, and distinctly declare to have no superhuman authority, are yet mentioned in the same category with the four Sanhitās, or collections of the hymns, as constituting the inferior science (in opposition to the knowledge of the supreme Spirit). From this we may reasonably infer that the author of the Vṛihad Āranyaka Upanishad also, when he specifies the Sūtras and some of the other works which he enumerates, intended to speak of the Vedangas or appendages of the Vedas, and perhaps the smṛitis also, as being the breathing of Brahma. The works which in the passage from the Mundaka are called Kalpa, are also commonly designated as the Kalpa Sūtras.

This conclusion is in some degree confirmed by referring to the passage from the Mahābhārata Ś. P. 7,660, which has been cited in p. 73, where it is said that the “great rishis obtained by devotion the Vedas, and the Itihāsas, which had disappeared at the end of the preceding Yuga.” Whatever may be the sense of the word Itihāsa in a Vedic work, there can be no doubt that in the Mahābhārata, which is itself an Itihāsa, the word refers to that class of metrical histories. And in this text we see these Itihāsas placed on a footing of equality with the Vedas, and regarded as having been, like them, pre-existent and supernatural. See also the passage from the Chhandogya Upanishad,

⁵² I take the opportunity of introducing here Sāyana's remarks on this passage in his Commentary on the Rig-veda, vol. i., p. 33. Atigambhīrasya vedasya artham avabodhayitum śixādāni śhaḍ-āṅgāni pravṛittāni | ata eva teshām apara-vidyā-rūpatvam Muṇḍakopaniśady Atharvṇikā āmananti | ‘dve vidye’ ityādi | . . . sādhanabhūta-dharma-jñāna-hetuvāt śhaḍ-āṅga-sahitānām karma-kāṇḍānām apara-vidyātvam | parama-purushārtha-bhūta-brahma-jñāna-hetuvād upaniśadāṃ para-vidyātvam. “The śixā and other six appendages are intended to promote the comprehension of the sense of the very deep Veda. Hence, in the Mundaka Upanishad, the followers of the Atharva-veda declare that these works belong to the class of inferior sciences, thus: ‘There are two sciences,’ etc. [see the entire passage in p. 18.] Since the sections of the Veda which relate to ceremonies [including, of course, the hymns], as well as the six appendages, lead to a knowledge of duty, which is an instrument [of something further], they are ranked as an inferior science. On the other hand the Upanishads, which conduct to a knowledge of Brahma, the supreme object of man, constitute the highest science.”

vii. 1, 1 ff. (Bibl. Ind., vol. iii., pp. 473 ff.) which will be given in the Appendix, where the Itihāsas and Puranas are spoken of as a fifth Veda. The same title is applied to them in the Bhāg. Pur. iii. 12, 39 : Itihāsa-purānāni pañchamaṁ vedam Īsvaraḥ | sarvebhya eva mukhebhyaḥ sasṛje sarva-darśanaḥ | “The omniscient Īsvara (God) created from all his mouths the Itihāsas and Puranas, as a fifth Veda.”

SECT. X.—Recapitulation of the Arguments urged in the Darśanas, and by Commentators in support of the Authority of the Vedas, with some remarks on these reasonings.

As in the preceding sections (vi.-ix.) I have entered at some length into the arguments urged by the authors of the philosophical systems and their commentators, in proof of the eternity and infallibility of the Vedas, it may be convenient to recapitulate these reasonings, and to add such observations as the consideration of them may suggest.

The grounds on which the apologists of the Vedas rest their authority are briefly these:—First, it is urged that, like the sun, they shine by their own light, and evince an inherent power both of revealing their own perfection, and of elucidating all other things, past and future, great and small, near and remote (Sāyana, as quoted above, p. 44 ; Śankara on Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3, above, p. 45, note 31 ; Sāṅkhya Sūtras, above, p. 84). Second, that they are not known to have had, and therefore could not have had, any human author, as the rishis merely saw, and did not compose them ; while, if they had any author, it was the deity, and as he is faultless, they could not have contractéd any imperfection from being his work (Nyāya-mālā-vistara and Vedārtha-prakāśa, above, pp. 88 and 52). Third, that the language of which they are composed is eternal, and therefore they are eternal, and consequently (I presume) perfect and infallible.⁵³ (Mīmāṃsā Sūtras and commentary; Brahma Sūtras with Śāṅkara's commentary; above, pp. 52-73.)

These arguments suggest a few remarks. In regard to the first ground for maintaining the infallibility of the Veda, viz., the evidence which radiates from itself, or its internal evidence, I need only observe that this is a species of proof which must be judged by the reason and conscience of each individual student. This evidence may appear conclusive to men in a certain stage of their national and personal culture, and especially to those who have been accustomed from their infancy to regard the Vedas with a hereditary veneration; whilst to persons in a different state of mental progress, and living under different influences, it will appear perfectly futile. It is quite clear that, even in India itself, there existed in former ages multitudes of learned and virtuous men who were unable to see the force of this argument, and who consequently rejected the authority of the Vedas. I allude of course to Buddha and his followers. (See also Part Second, p. 180 ff., where the objections of the rationalist Kautsa are detailed.)

In regard to the second argument, viz. that the Vedas must be of divine origin, as they are not known to have had any human author, I observe as follows. The Greek historian, Herodotus, remarks (ii. 23) of a geographer of his own day who explained the annual inundations of the river Nile by supposing its stream to be derived from an imaginary ocean flowing round the earth, which no one had ever seen, that his opinion did not admit of confutation, because he carried the discussion back into the region of the unapparent (ἐς ἀφανὲς τὸν μῦθον ἀνευέλκας οὐκ ἔχει ἔλεγχον). The same might be said of the Indian speculators, who argue that the Veda must have had a supernatural origin, because it was never observed to have had a human author like other books;—that by thus removing the negative grounds on which they rest their case into the unknown depths of antiquity, they do their utmost to place themselves beyond the reach of direct refutation. But it is to be observed (1) that, even if it were to be admitted that no human authors of the Vedas were remembered in later ages, this would prove nothing more than their antiquity, and that it would still be incumbent on their apologists to show that this circumstance necessarily involved their supernatural character; and (2) that, in point of fact, Indian tradition does point to certain rishis or bards as the authors of the Vedic hymns. It is true, indeed, as has been already noticed (p. 90), that these rishis are said to have only seen the hymns, which (it is alleged) were eternally pre-existent, and that they were not their authors. But as it appears to be shown by tradition that the hymns were uttered by such and such rishis, how is it proved that these rishis were not uttering the mere productions of their own minds? The whole character of these compositions, and the circumstances under which they appear to have arisen, are in harmony with the supposition that they were nothing more than the natural expression of the personal hopes and feelings of those ancient bards from whom they proceeded. In these songs the Arian sages celebrated the praises of their ancestral gods (while at the same time they sought to conciliate their goodwill by a variety of acceptable oblations), and besought of them all the blessings which men in general desire—health, wealth, long life, cattle, offspring, victory over their enemies, and in some cases also, forgiveness of sin and celestial felicity.

The scope of these hymns is well summed up in the passage which I have already quoted in Part Second, p. 206. “The rishis desiring [various] objects, hastened to the gods with metrical prayers.” The Nirukta, quoted in the same place, says: “Each particular hymn has for its deity the god to whom the rishi, seeking to obtain any object of desire which he longs for, addresses his prayer.”

And in the continuation of the same passage from the Nirukta (vii. 3), the fact that the hymns express the different feelings or objects of the rishis is distinctly recognized:—Paroxa-kritāḥ pratyaxa-kritāscha mantrā bhūyishthā alpāsa ādhyātmikāḥ | athāpi stutir eva bhavati na āsīrvāda ‘Indrasya nu vīryāni pravocham’ iti yathā etasmin sūkte | athāpi āsīr eva na stutiḥ ‘suchaxā aham axībhyām bhūyāsaṁ suvarchā mukhena sūsrut karnābhyām bhūyāsam’ iti | tad etad bahulam ādhvaryave yājñeshu cha mantreshu | athāpi śapathābhīśāpau | ‘adyā murīya’ ityādi . . . athāpi kasyachid bhāvasya āchikhyāsā | ‘na mṛityur āsīd’ ityādi . . . | athāpi paridevanā kasmāchchid bhāvāt | ‘sudevo adya prapated anāvṛid’ ityādi | athāpi nindā-prasāmsē | ‘kevalāgho bhavati kevalādi’ ityādi | evam axa-sūkte dyūta-nindā cha kṛishi-prasāmsā cha || evam uchchāvachair abhīprāyair ṛishinām mantra-dṛishtayo bhavanti | “ [Of the three kinds of verses specified in the preceding section] those which address a god as absent, and those which address him as present, are the most numerous, while those which are addressed to the speaker himself [or the soul] are rare. It happens also that a god is praised without any blessing being invoked, as in the hymn (R. V. i. 32). ‘I declare the heroic deeds of Indra,’ etc. Again, blessings are invoked without any praise being offered, as in the words, ‘May I see well with my eyes, have a handsome face, and hear well with my ears.’ This frequently occurs in the Ādhvaryava (Yajur) Veda, and in the sacrificial formulæ. Then again we find oaths and curses, as in the words, (R. V. vii. 104, 15), ‘May I die to-day, if I am a yātudhāna,’ etc. (See Part First, p. 132). Further, we observe the desire to describe some particular state of things, as in the verse (R. V. x. 129, 2) ‘Death was not then, nor immortality,’ etc. Then there is lamentation, as in the verse (R. V. x. 95, 14), ‘The beautiful god will disappear and never return,’ etc. Again, we have blame and praise, as in the words (R. V. x. 117, 6), ‘The man who eats alone, bears the blame alone,’ etc. So too in the hymn to dice (R. V. x. 34, 13), there is a censure upon dice, and a commendation of agriculture. Thus the objects for which the hymns were seen by the rishis were very various.”

It is to be observed, however, that though in this passage the author, Yāska, speaks of the various desires which the rishis expressed in different hymns, he nevertheless adheres to the idea which was recognized in his age, and in which he doubtless participated, that the rishis saw the hymns.

I may also refer to the passage quoted from the Nirukta x. 42, in Part Second, pp. 391, 392, note, where the form of the metre in particular hymns appears to be ascribed to the peculiar genius of the rishi Paruchhepa.

In Nirukta iii. 11 a similar manner of regarding the rishi Kutsa is ascribed to the interpreter Aupamanyava: Rishih Kutso bhavati karttā stomānām ity Aupamanyavaḥ | “‘Kutsa is the name of a rishi, a maker of hymns,’ as Aupamanyava thinks.”

I do not, as I have already intimated, quote these passages of the Nirukta to show that the author regarded the hymns as the ordinary productions of the rishis’ own minds, for this would be at variance with the expression “seeing,” which he applies to the mental act by which they were created. It appears also from the terms in which he speaks of the rishis in the passage (Nirukta i. 20) quoted in p. 174 of the Second Part, where they are described as having an intuitive insight into duty, that he placed them on a far higher level than the inferior men of later ages. But it is clear that Yāska recognizes the hymns as being applicable to the particular circumstances in which the rishis were placed, and as being the bonâ fide expression of their individual emotions and desires. (See also Nirukta ii. 10 and 24, quoted in Part First, pp. 143, 144, and 124.) But if this be true, the supposition that these hymns, i.e., hymns suited to declare the different feelings and wishes of all the different rishis, were eternally pre-existent, and were perceived by them at the precise conjunctures when they were required to express their several aims, is perfectly gratuitous and unnecessary, (and involves what Indian logicians call a gaurava).

In regard to the third argument for the authority of the Vedas, viz., that they are eternal, because the words of which they are composed are eternal, and because these words have an inherent and eternal (and not a merely conventional) connection with the significations or objects, or the species of objects, which they represent, it is to be observed that it is rejected both by the Nyāya and Sāṅkhya schools.⁵⁴ And I am unable (if I rightly comprehend this orthodox reasoning) to see how it proves the authority of the Veda more than that of any other book. If the words of the Veda are eternal, so must those of the Bauddha books be eternal, and consequently the perfection and infallibility of these heretical works must be as much proved by this argument as the divine origin of the Vedas, whose pretensions they reject and oppose.

Against the eternity of the Vedas an objection has been raised, which Jaimini considers it necessary to notice, viz., that various historical personages are named in their pages, and that as these works could not have existed before the persons whose doings they record, they must have commenced to exist in time. This difficulty Jaimini attempts, as we have seen above (pp. 61, 63), to meet by explaining away the names of the historical personages in question. Thus Babara Prāvahini is said to be nothing else than an appellation of the wind, which is eternal. And this method, it is said, is to be applied in all similar cases. Another of the passages mentioned by an objector (see above, p. 62) as referring to non-eternal objects is R. V. iii. 53, 14, "What are the cows doing among the Kikatas?" etc. The author of the Mīmāṃsā Sūtras would perhaps attempt to show that by these Kikatas we are to understand some eternally pre-existing beings. But Yāska, the author of the Nirukta, who had not been instructed in any such subtleties, speaks of the Kikatas as a non-Aryan nation. (Part Second, p. 362.) It is difficult to suppose that Jaimini—unless he was an enthusiast, and not the cool and acute reasoner he has commonly proved himself to be—could have seriously supposed that this rule of interpretation could ever be generally received or carried out. The Brahmanas evidently intend to represent numerous occurrences which they narrate, as having actually taken place in time, and the actors in them as having been real historical personages. See, for instance, the two legends from the Śatapatha Brahmana, quoted in the Second Part of this work, pp. 324 and 419. And it is impossible to peruse the Vedic hymns without coming to the conclusion that they also record a multitude of events, which the writers believed to have been transacted by men on earth in former ages. (See the passages quoted from the Rig-veda in the First and Second Parts of this work, passim; those, for example, in Part Second, p. 208.)

We shall, no doubt, be assisted in arriving at a correct conclusion in regard to the real origin and character of the hymns of the Veda, if we enquire what opinion the rishis, by whom they were confessedly spoken, entertained of their own utterances; and this I propose to investigate in the following chapter.

CHAPTER II.

THE RISHIS, AND THEIR OPINIONS IN REGARD TO THE ORIGIN OF THE VEDIC HYMNS.

I HAVE already shewn, in the preceding pages, as well as in Part Second of this work, that the hymns of the Rig-veda themselves supply us with numerous data by which we can judge of the circumstances to which they owed their origin, and of the manner in which they were created. We have seen that they were the natural product and expression of the particular state of society, of the peculiar religious conceptions, and of all those other influences, physical and moral, which prevailed at the period when they were composed, and acted upon the minds of their authors. (Part Second, pp. 205 ff; and above, pp. 109 ff.) We find in them ideas, a language, a spirit, and a colouring totally different from those which characterize the religious writings of the Hindus of a later era. They frequently discover to us the simple germs from which mythological legends current in subsequent ages were derived,—germs which in many cases were developed in so fanciful and extravagant a manner as to prove that the correct tradition had long before disappeared, and that the lost details have been replaced by pure fictions of the imagination. They afford us very distinct indications of the locality in which they were composed (Part Second, pp. 354-372); they shew us the Arian tribes living in a state of warfare with surrounding enemies (many of them, no doubt, alien in race and language), and gradually, as we may infer, forcing their way onward to the east and south (Part Second, pp. 374 ff., 384 ff., 414 ff.); they supply us with numerous specimens of the particular sorts of prayers, viz., for protection and victory, which men so circumstanced would naturally address to the gods whom they worshipped, as well as of those more common supplications which men in general offer up for the various blessings which constitute the sum of human welfare; and they bring before us as the objects of existing veneration a class of deities (principally, if not exclusively, personifications of the elements, and of the powers either of nature, or of reason) who gradually lost their importance in the estimation of the later Indians, and made way for gods of a different description, invested with new attributes, and in many cases bearing new appellations.

These peculiarities of the hymns, combined with the archaic forms of the dialect in which they are composed, and the references which are made to them, as pre-existent, in the liturgical works by which they are expounded and applied, abundantly justify us in regarding them as the most ancient of all the Indian Scriptures,—as well as the natural product and the spontaneous representation of the ideas, feelings, and aspirations of the bards from whom they emanated.

We can also, as I have shewn, discover from the Vedic hymns themselves, that some of them were newer and others older, that they were the works of many successive generations of poets, that their composition probably extended over several centuries, and that in some places their authors represent them as being the productions of their own minds, while in other passages they appear to ascribe to their own words a certain divine character, or attribute their composition to some supernatural assistance. (Part Second, pp. 206 ff., 219 ff.)

I shall now proceed to adduce further proofs from the hymns of the Rig-veda in support of these last mentioned positions; repeating, at the same time, for the sake of completeness, the texts which I have already cited in the Second Part.

SECT. I.—Passages from the Hymns of the Veda which distinguish between the Rishis as Ancient and Modern.

The appellations or epithets applied by the authors of the hymns to themselves, and to the sages who in former times had instituted, as well as to their contemporaries who continued to conduct, the different rites of divine worship, are the following : rishi, kavi, medhāvin, vipra, vipaśhit, vedhas, dirghaśrut, muni, etc. The rishis are defined in Boehtlingk and Roth's lexicon, to be persons "who, whether singly or in chorus, either on their own behalf or on behalf of others, invoked the gods in artificial language, and in song;" and the word is said to denote especially "the priestly bards who made this art their profession." The word kavi means "wise," or "a poet," and has ordinarily the latter sense in modern Sanskrit. Vipra means "wise," and in later Sanskrit a "Brahman." Medhāvin means "intelligent;" vipaśhit and vedhas, "wise" or "learned;" and dirgha-śrut, a "man who has heard much." Muni signifies in modern Sanskrit a "sage" or devotee." It is not much used in the Rig-veda, but occurs in viii. 17, 13 (Part Second, p. 397).

The following passages from the Rig-veda either expressly distinguish between contemporary rishis and those of a more ancient date, or, at any rate, make reference to the one or the other class. This recognition of a succession of rishis constitutes one of the historical elements in the Veda. It is an acknowledgment on the part of the rishis themselves that numerous persons had existed, and events occurred, anterior to their own age, and, consequently, in time; and it therefore refutes, by the testimony of the Veda itself, the assertion of Jaimini (above, pp. 60-63, and 112) that none but eternally pre-existing objects are mentioned in that book.

If, under this and other heads of my inquiry, I have cited a larger number of passages than might have appeared to be necessary, it has been done with the intention of showing that abundant evidence of my various positions can be adduced from all parts of the Hymn-collection.

R. V. i. 1, 2.—Agnih pūrvebhir ṛishibhir idyo nūtanair uta | sa devān eha vaxati | “Agni, who is worthy to be celebrated by former, as well as modern rishis, will bring the gods hither.”

The word pūrvebhīḥ is explained by Sāyana thus: Purātanair Bhṛigu-angirah-prabhṛitibhir ṛishibhīḥ | “By the ancient rishis, Bhṛigu, Angiras,” etc.; and nūtanaiḥ is interpreted by idānūntanair asmābhir api, “by us of the present day also.”

R. V. i. 48, 14.—Ye chid hi tvām ṛishayaḥ pūrve utaye juhūre ityādi | “The former rishis who invoked thee for succour,” etc.

R. V. i. 80, 16.—Yām Atharvā Manush pitā Dadhyaṇ dhīyam atnata | tasmīn brahmāṇi pūrvathā Indre ukthā samagmata ityādi | “In the ceremony [or hymn] which Atharvan, or our father Manu, or Dadhyanch performed, the prayers and praises were, as of old, congregated in that Indra,” etc.

R. V. i. 118, 3 (repeated in R. V. iii. 58, 3).— . . . Āhur viprāsaḥ Aśvinā purājāḥ | “O Aśvins, the ancient sages say,” etc.

R. V. i. 131, 6.— . . . Ā me asya vedhaso navīyaso manma śrudhi navīyasaḥ | “Hear the hymn of me this modern sage, of this modern [sage].”

R. V. i. 139, 9.—Dadhyaṇ ha me janusham pūrvo Angirah Priyamedhāḥ Kanvo Atrir Manur vidur ityādi | “The ancient Dadhyanch, Angiras, Priyamedhas, Kanva, Atri, and Manu know my birth.”

R. V. i. 175, 6.—Yathā pūrvebhyo jaritṛibhya Indra maya iva āpo na tṛishyate babhūtha | Tām anu tvā nividaṁ johāvīmi ityādi | “Indra, as thou hast been like a joy to former worshippers, like waters to the thirsty, I invoke thee again and again with this hymn,” etc.

R. V. iv. 20, 5.—Vi yo rarapśe ṛishibhir navebhir vṛixo na pakvaḥ sṛīnyo na jetā | . . . achhā vivakmi puruhūtam Indram | “I call upon that Indra, invoked by many, who, like a ripe tree, like a conqueror expert in arms, has been celebrated by recent rishis.”

R. V. iv. 50, 1.—Tam pratnāsa ṛishayo dīdhyanāḥ puro viprā dadhire mandra-jihvam | “The ancient rishis, resplendent and sage, have placed in front of them Bṛihaspati with gladdening tongue.”

R. V. v. 42, 6.—. . . Na te pūrve Maghavan na aparāso na vīryam nūtanah kaśchana āpa | “Neither the ancients nor later men, nor any modern man, has attained to [conceived] thy heroism, o Maghavan.”

R. V. x. 54, 3.—Ke u nu te mahimānah samasya asmat pūrve ṛishayo antam āpuḥ | “Who among the rishis who were before us have attained to the end of all thy greatness?”

R. V. vi. 19, 4.—Yathā chit pūrve jaritāra āsur anedyā anavādyā arishṭāḥ | “As [Indra’s] former worshippers were, [may we be] blameless, irreproachable, and unharmed.”

R. V. vi. 21, 5.—Idā hi te vevishataḥ purājāḥ pratnāsa āsuḥ purukṛit sakḥāyah | Ye madhyamāsa uta nūtanāsa utāvamasya puruhāta bodhi | “For here, o energetic god, the ancients born of old, have been the friends of thee, who didst often approach them; and so too were the men of the middle and later ages. O much-invoked, think of the most recent of all.”¹

R. V. vi. 21, 8.—Sa tu śrudhi Indra nūtanasya brahmanyato vīra hārudhāyah | “Heroic Indra, supporting the poet, listen to the modern [bard] who wishes to celebrate thee.”

R. V. vi. 22, 2.—Tam u nah pūrve pitaro navagvāḥ sapta viprāsaḥ abhi vājayantaḥ ityādi | “Him (Indra) our ancient fathers, the seven sages, desiring food, celebrated, performing the nine-months’ rite,” etc.

R. V. vi. 50, 15.—Evā napāto mama tasya dhībhir Bharadvājā abhyarchanti arkaiḥ | “Thus do the Bharadvājās my grandsons adore thee with hymns and praises.”

R. V. vii. 18, 1.—Tve ha yat pitarāś chid nah Indra viśvā vāmā jaritāro asanvann ityādi | “Since, in thee, o Indra, our fathers, thy worshippers, attained all riches,” etc.

R. V. vii. 29, 4.—Uto gha te purushyā id āsan eshām pūr-

R. V. x. 14, 15 (= A. V. xviii. 2, 2).—Idaṁ nama ṛishibhyaḥ pūrvajebhyaḥ pūrvēbhyaḥ pathikṛidbhyaḥ | “This reverence to the rishis, born of old, the ancients, who shewed us the road.” (This verse may also be employed to prove that at the end of the Vedic period the rishis had become objects of veneration.)

R. V. x. 56, 14.—Vasishthāsaḥ pitṛivad vācham akrata devān ṛlānā ṛishivad | ityādi | “The Vasishthas, like the forefathers, like the rishis, have uttered their voice, worshipping the gods.”

R. V. x. 96, 5.—Tvam aharyathā upastutaḥ pūrvēbhir Indra harikēsa yajvabhīḥ | “Indra, with golden hair, thou didst rejoice, when lauded by the ancient priests.”

R. V. x. 98, 9.—Tvām pūrve ṛishayo gīrbhir āyan tvām adhvareṣu puruhūta viṣve | “To thee the former rishis resorted with their hymns; to thee, thou much invoked, all men [resorted] at the sacrifices.”

Vājasaneyi Samhitā, xviii. 5, 2.—Imau te pazāv ajarau pata-trinau yābhyām raxāṁsi apahaṁsi Agne | tābhyām patema sukṛitām u lokaṁ yatra ṛishayo jagmuḥ prathamajāḥ purānāḥ | “But these undecaying, soaring pinions, with which, o Agni, thou slayest the Raxases,—with them let us ascend to the world of the righteous, whither the earliest-born ancient rishis have gone.” (This verse is quoted in the Śatapatha Brahmana, ix. 4, 4, 4, p. 739.)

The ancient rishis, as Sāyana says in his note on R. V. i. 2, were Bhrigu, Angiras, and others whom he does not name. In another place we find Atharvan, Manu, Dadhyanch, and others mentioned. I will not attempt to give any critical account of these ancient sages. For some texts relating to Bhrigu, I may refer to the First Part of this work, p. 152 ff.; and some passages relating to Manu will be found in the Second Part, pp. 324-332. In regard to Atharvan, as well as Angiras, Prof. Goldstücker's Sanskrit and English Dictionary, and in regard to the same personages and Dadhyanch, the Sanskrit and German Lexicon of Boehlingk and Roth, may be consulted.

SECT. II.—Passages from the Veda in which a distinction is drawn between the older and the more recent hymns.

From the passages which I propose to bring forward in the present section, it will be found that the hymns which the rishis addressed to the gods are frequently spoken of as new, while others of ancient date are also sometimes mentioned. The rishis no doubt entertained the idea that the gods would be more highly gratified if their praises were celebrated in new, and perhaps more elaborate and beautiful compositions, than if older and possibly ruder, prayers had been repeated.

The fact that a hymn is called new by its author, does not, however, by any means enable us to determine its age relatively to that of other hymns in the collection, for this epithet of new is, as we shall see, applied to numerous compositions throughout the Veda; and even when a hymn is not designated as new, it may, nevertheless, be in reality of recent date, compared with the others by which it is surrounded. When, however, any rishi characterizes his own effusion as new, we are of course necessarily led to conclude that he was acquainted with many older songs of the same kind. The relative ages of the different hymns can only be settled by means of the internal evidence furnished by their dialect, style, metre, ideas, and general contents; and we may, no doubt, hope that much will by degrees be done by the researches of critical scholars towards such a chronological classification of the constituent portions of the Rig-veda.

The hymns, praises, or prayers uttered by the rishis are called by a great variety of names, such as rich, sāman, yajush, brahman, arka, uktha, sūkta, mantra, manman, mati, manīshā, sumati, dhī, dhīti, dhīshanā, stoma, stuti, sushṭuti, praśasti, śaṁsa, gir, vāch, vachas, nītha, nivid, etc.

R. V. i. 12, 11.—Sa nah stavāna ābhara gāyatrena navīyasā | rayiṁ vīravatīm isham | “Glorified by our newest hymn, do thou bring to us wealth and food with progeny.” (Sāyana explains navīyasā by pūrvakair apy asampāditena gāyatreṇa | “A hymn not formed even by former rishis.”)

R. V. i. 27, 4.—Imam ū shu tvam asmākaṁ saniṁ gāyatraṁ navyāṁsam | Agne deveshu pravochaḥ | “Agni, thou hast announced [or do thou announce] among the gods this our offering, our newest hymn.”

R. V. i. 60, 3.—Taṁ navyasī hṛida ā jāyamānam asmat-sukṛttir madhu-jihvam aśyāḥ | yam ṛitviḥ vṛijane mānushāsaḥ prayasvanta āyavo jījananta | “May our newest laudation reach thee, the sweet tongued, who art produced from the heart, whom mortal priests the descendants of Manu, offering oblations, have generated in battle.”

R. V. i. 89, 3.—Tān pūrvayā nividā hūmahe vayam Bhagam Mitram Aditiṁ Daxam Asridham ityādi | “We invoke with an ancient hymn Bhaga, Mitra, Aditi, Daxa, Asridh [or the friendly],” etc. (Pūrvakālinayā | nityayā | nividā | vedātmihayā vāchā | “With an ancient—eternal, hymn—a Vedic text.” Sāyana.)

R. V. i. 96, 2.—Sa pūrvayā nividā kavyatā Āyor imāḥ prajā ajanayad manūnām | “Through the ancient laudatory hymn of Āyu he generated these children of the Manus.”

R. V. i. 130, 10.—Sa no navyebhir vṛishakarmann ukthais purāṁ darttaḥ pāyubhiḥ pāhi śagmaiḥ | “Through our new hymns, do thou, showerer of favours, destroyer of cities, sustain us with invigorating blessings.”

R. V. i. 143, 1.—Pra tavyasīṁ navyasīṁ dhātīm Agnaye vācho matiṁ sahasaḥ sūnave bhare | “I bring to Agni, the son of strength, a new and energetic hymn, a vocal celebration.”

R. V. ii. 17, 1.—Tad asmaī navyam Angiras-vad archata ityādi | “Utter to him [Indra] that new [hymn] like the Angirasas.” (“New, i.e., never before seen among other people.” anyeshv adriṣṭa-pūrvam | Sāyana.)

R. V. ii. 24, 1.—Sa imām avidḍhi prabhṛitiṁ ya īśishe | ayā vidhema navayā mahā girā | “Do thou who rulest receive this, our offering [of praise]: let us worship thee with this new and grand song.”

R. V. iii. 1, 20.—Ētā te Agne janimā sanāni pra pūrvyāya nūtanāni vocham | “These ancient [and yet] new productions I have uttered to thee, Agni, who art ancient.” (Comp. R. V. viii. 84, 5, in the next section.)

R. V. iii. 32, 13.—Yaḥ stomebhir vāvṛidhe pūrvyebhir yo madhyamebhir uta nūtanebhīḥ | “[Indra] who has grown through ancient, middle, and modern hymns.”

R. V. iii. 39, 1.—Indram matir hṛida ā vachyamānā achhā patiṁ stoma-tuṣṭā jigāti | ā jāgrīvir vidathe śasyamānā Indra yat te jāyate viddhi tasya | 2. divāśchid ā pūrvyā jāyamānā vi jāgrīvir vidathe śasyamānā | bhadrā vastrāṇi arjunā vasānā sāvīyam asme sanajā pitryā dhīḥ | “1. The song, fabricated by the bard, and uttered from the heart, proceeds to Indra the lord; it arouses him when chaunted at the sacrifice: be cognizant, Indra, of this [praise] which is produced for thee. 2. Produced before the dawn, arousing thee when chaunted at the sacrifice, clothed in beautiful and radiant garments,—this is our ancient ancestral hymn.” (Pitryā is rendered by Sāyana as pitṛi-kramāgatā, “received by succession from our fathers.”)

R. V. iii. 62, 7.—Iyaṁ te Pūshann āghṛiṇe susṭutir deva navyasī | asmābhis tubhyaṁ śasyate | “Divine and glowing Pūshan, this new laudation is uttered by us to thee.”

R. V. v. 42, 13.—Pra sū mahe sūsaraṇāya medhām giram bhare navyasīm jāyamanām | “I present to the mighty protector a mental production, a new utterance [now] springing up.”

R. V. v. 55, 8.—Yat pūrvyam Maruto yachcha nūtanam yad udyate Vasavo yachcha śasyate | viśvasya tasya bhavathā navedasah | “Be cognizant of all that is ancient, Maruts, and of all that is modern, of all that is spoken, Vasus, and of all that is sung.”

R. V. vi. 17, 13.—. . . Suvīram tvā svāyudham suvajram ā brahma navyam avase vavṛityāt | “May the new prayer impel thee, the heroic, well-accoutred thunderer, to succour us.” (“New, i.e., never made before by others: prayer, i.e., the hymn made by us.” Nūtanam anyair akṛita-pūrvam | brahma asmābhiḥ kṛitam stotram | Sāyana.)

R. V. vi 22, 7.—Taṁ vo dhīyā nāvyaśyā śavishtam pratnam pratnavat paritaṁsayadhyai | “I seek, like the ancients, to stimulate thee, the ancient, with a new hymn.”

R. V. vi. 34. 1.—Sañcha tve jagmur gira Indra pūrṅvīr vi cha tvad yanti vibhvo manishāḥ | purā nūnañcha stutaya ṛishīnām pasprīdhre Indre adhi ukthārkāḥ | “Many prayers, Indra, are collected in thee; numerous hymns issue forth from thee; both before and now the praises, texts and hymns of rishis have hastened emulously to Indra.”

R. V. vi. 44, 13.—Yaḥ pūrṅvābhīr uta nūtanābhīr gīrbhīr vāvṛidhe grīnatām ṛishīnām | “He (Indra) who grew through the ancient and modern hymns of adoring rishis.” (See R. V. iii. 32, 13, above p. 123.)

R. V. vi. 48, 11.—Ā sakhāyaḥ subardughām dhenum ajadhvam upa navyasā vachāḥ | “Friends, bring hither the milch cow with a new hymn.”

R. V. vi. 49, 1.—Stushe janāṁ suvratāṁ navyasībhīr gīrbhīr Mitrāvarunā sumnayantā | “With new praises I celebrate the holy race, with Mitra and Varuna, the beneficent.” (“The holy race, i.e., the divine race, the company of the gods,” sukarmāṇām janāṁ daīvyāṁ janāṁ deva-sangham | Sāyana.)

R. V. vi. 50, 6.—Abhī tyaṁ vīraṁ girvaṇasam archa Indram brahmaṇā jarītar navena | “Invoke, o worshipper, with a new hymn, the heroic Indra, who delights in praise.”

R. V. vi. 62, 4.—Tā navyaso jaramāṇasya manma upa bhūshato yuyujānasapti ityādi | 5. Tā valgū dasrā puruśākatamā pratnā navyasā vachasā vivāse | 4. “These (Asvins), with yoked horses, approach the hymn of their new worshipper.” . . . 5. I adore with a new hymn these brilliant, ancient, and most mighty deliverers.”

R. V. vii. 53, 2.—Pra pūrṅvaje pitarā navyasībhīr gīrbhīḥ kṛīṇudhvam sadane ṛitasya ityādi | “In the place of sacrifice propitiate with new hymns the ancient, the parents,” etc.

R. V. vii. 56, 23.—Bhūri chakra Marutaḥ pitryāni ukthāni

yā vaḥ śasyante purā chit | “Ye have done great things, o Maruts, when our fathers’ hymns were sung of old in your honour.”

R. V. vii. 59, 4.—. . . abhi va āvartt sumatir navīyasī ityādi | “The new hymn has been directed to you.”

R. V. vii. 61, 6.—. . . Pra vām manmāni ṛichase navāni kritāni brahma jujushann imāni | “May the new hymns made in your honour, may these prayers gratify you.”

R. V. vii. 93, 1.—Śuchīm nu stomaṁ nava-jātam adya Indrāgnī Vṛittra-hanā jushetham | ubhā hi vām suhavā johavīmi ityādi | “Indra and Agni, slayers of Vṛittra, receive with favour the pure hymn newly produced to-day. For again and again do I invoke you who lend a willing ear,” etc.

R. V. viii. 5, 24.—Tābhīr āyātam ūtibhīr navyasībhiḥ sūśastībhīr yad vām vṛishanvasū have | “Come with those same succours, since I invoke you, bountiful [deities], with new praises.” (The epithet navyasībhiḥ in this text may possibly apply to the word atibhiḥ, “aids.”)

R. V. viii. 6, 11.—Aham pratnena manmanā girāḥ śumbhāmi Kanva-vat yena Indrāḥ śushmam id dadhe | “I decorate my praises with an ancient hymn, after the manner of Kanva, whereby Indra put on strength.”

R. V. viii. 6, 43.—Imām su pūroyām dhīyam madhor ghṛitasya pipyushīm Kanvā ukthena vavṛidhuḥ | “The Kanvas with their praises have augmented this ancient hymn, replenished with sweet butter.”

R. V. viii. 12, 10.—Iyam te ṛitvīyāvātī dhītīr eti navīyasī saparyantī ityādi | “This new and solemn hymn advances to honour thee,” etc.

R. V. viii. 20, 19.—Yūnaḥ ū su navishṭhayā vṛishnaḥ pāvakān abhi Sobhare girā | gāya ityādi | “Celebrate, Sobhari, with a new hymn these youthful [gods] who shower down benefits and purify us.”

R. V. viii. 23, 14.—Śrushtī Agne navasya me stomasya vīra viśpate vi māyinas tapushā razaso dāha | “Heroic Agni, lord of the people, listening [?] to my new hymn, burn up with thy heat the deluding Raxases."

R. V. viii. 25, 24.—Kaśāvantā viprā navishṭhaya māti maho vājīnāv arvantā sachā asanam | "I have celebrated at once with a new hymn, these sage and mighty [princes], strong, swift, and carrying whips."

R. V. viii. 39, 6.—. . . Agnir veda marttānām apīchyam . . . Agnir dvārā vyūrṇute svāhuto navīyasā | "Agni knows the secrets of mortals . . . Agni, invoked by a new [hymn], opens the doors."

R. V. viii. 40, 12.—Eva Indrāgnibhyām pitṛivad navīyo Māndhātṛivad Angirasvad avāchi ityādi | "Thus has a new [hymn] been uttered to Indra and Agni after the manner of our fathers, and of Māndhātṛi, and of Angiras."

R. V. viii. 41, 2.—Tam ū shu samanā girā pitṛiṇāñcha manmabhir Nābhākasya praśastibhiḥ | yaḥ sindhūnām upa udaye sapta-svasā sa madhyamaḥ | "[Worship] him (Varuna) at once with a song, with the hymns of the fathers, and with the praises of Nābhāka. He who dwells at the birth-place of the streams, the lord of the seven sisters, abides in the centre." (This verse is quoted in the Nirukta x. 5. Nābhāka is said by Yaska, to have been a rishi (ṛishir Nābhāko babhūva). A translation of the passage is given in Roth's Illustrations of the Nir. p. 135, where reference is also made to two verses of the preceding hymn (viii. 40, 4, 5), in which Nābhāka (the ancestor of Nābhāka) is mentioned thus: (verse 4) Abhyarcha Nābhāka-vad Indragñi yojasā girā . . . (verse 5) Pra brahmāni Nābhāka-vad Indrāgnibhyām irajyata | "Worship Indra and Agni with sacrifice and hymn, like Nābhāka . . . Like Nābhāka, direct your prayers to Indra and Agni." In explanation of the seven sisters, Roth refers to Nir. v. 27 (R. V. viii. 58, 12) where the seven rivers are mentioned. See his Illustrations of Nir. pp. 70, 71.

R. V. viii. 44, 12.—Agniḥ pratnena manmanā śumbhānas tanvaṁ svām kavīḥ vipreṇa vavridhe | "The wise Agni, illuminating his own body at [the sound of] the sage and ancient hymn, has become augmented."

R. V. viii. 55, 11.—Vayaṁ gha te apūrvyā Indra brahmāṇi vṛittrahan purutamāsaḥ puruhūta vajrivo bhṛitiṁ na pra bhārāmasi | "Indra, slayer of Vrittra, thunderer, invoked of many, we [thy] numerous [worshippers] bring to thee, as thy hire, hymns which never before existed."

R. V. viii. 63, 7, 8.—Iyaṁ te navyasī matir Agne adhāyi asmad ā mandra sujāta sukrato amūra dasma atithe | sa te Agne śantamā chanishṭhā bhavatu priyā tayā vardhasva susṭṭutah | "O Agni, joyful, well-born, wise and wondrous guest, this new hymn has been offered to thee by us; may it be dear to thee, agreeable and pleasant: lauded by it, do thou increase."

R. V. viii. 65, 5, 6.—. . . Indraṁ gīrbhīr havāmahe | Indram pratnena manmanā marutvantam havāmahe ityādi | 12. (= S. V. ii. 340.) Vācham asṭāpadīm aham navasraktim ṛitaspriśam | Indrāt pari tanvam mame | 5. "We invoke Indra with songs; we invoke Indra, attended by the Maruts, with an ancient hymn. . . . 12. I twine round the body of Indra a verse of eight syllables and nine lines, abounding in sacred truth." (This verse is translated and explained by Professor Benfey, Sāma-veda, p. 255.)

R. V. ix. 9, 8.—Nu navyase navīyase sūktāya sādahaya pathaḥ | pratnavad rochaya ruchaḥ | "Prepare (o Soma) the paths for our newest, most recent, hymn; and, as of old, cause the lights to shine."

R. V. ix. 42, 2.—Esha pratnena manmanā devo devebhyah pari | dhārāya [qu. dhārayā?] pavate sutah | "This god, poured forth to the gods, with an ancient hymn, purifies with his stream."

R. V. ix. 91, 5.—Sa pratnavad navyase viśvavāra sūktāya pathaḥ kṛinuhī prāchaḥ ityādi | "O god, who possesseth all good, make, as of old, forward paths for this new hymn."

R. V. ix. 99, 4 (= S. V. ii. 983).—Taṁ gāthayā purānyā punānam abhi anūshata | uto kṛipanta dhītayo devānām nāma

bibhratiḥ | “They praised the pure god with an ancient song ; and hymns embracing the names of the gods have supplicated him.” (Benfey translates the last clause differently.)

R. V. x. 4, 6.— . . . Iyañ te Agne navyasī manīshā ityādi | “This is for thee, Agni, a new hymn,” etc.

R. V. x. 89, 3.—Samānam asmāy anapāvṛid archa xmayā divo asamam brahma navyam ityādi | “Sing (to Indra) a new and unceasing hymn, worthy of him [?], and unequalled in earth or heaven [?].”

R. V. x. 91, 13.—Imām pratnāya susṭutiñ navīyasīñ vocheyam asmāy úsate śrinotu naḥ | “I will address to this ancient [deity] my new praises, which he desires ; may he listen to us.”

“R. V. x. 96, 11.— . . . Navyañ navyañ haryasi manma nu priyam ityādi | “Thou delightest in ever new hymns, which are dear to thee,” etc.

SECT. III.—Passages of the Rig-veda, in which the rishis describe themselves as the composers of the hymns.

In this section, I propose to quote, first of all, those passages in which the rishis distinctly speak of themselves as the authors of the hymns, and express no consciousness whatever of deriving assistance or inspiration from any supernatural source. I shall then adduce some further texts in which, though nothing is directly stated regarding the composition of the hymns, there is at the same time nothing which would lead the reader to imagine that the rishis looked upon them as anything else than the offspring of their own minds.

I shall arrange the quotations in which the rishis distinctly claim the authorship, according to the particular verb which is employed to express this idea. These verbs are (1) kṛi, “to make,” (2) tax (= the Greek τεκταίνωμαι), “to fabricate,” and (3) jan, “to beget, generate, or produce,” with others which are less explicit.

I.—I proceed to adduce the passages in which (1) the verb

kṛi, "to make," is applied to the composition of the hymns. (Compare R. V. vii. 66, 6, already quoted in the last section.)

R. V. i. 20, 1.—Ayañ devāya janmane stomo viprebhir āsayā | akāri ratna-dhātamaḥ. | "This hymn, conferring wealth, has been made to the divine race, by the sages, with their mouth [or in presence of the gods]."

R. V. i. 31, 18.—Etēna Agne brahmaṇā vāvṛidhasva śakti vā yat te chakṛima vidā vā | "Grow, o Agni, by this prayer which we have made to thee through [or according to] our power, or our knowledge."

R. V. i. 61, 16.—Evā te hariyojanā suvṛikti Indra brahmāṇi Gotamāsaḥ akran | "Thus, o Indra, yoker of steeds, have the Gotamas made for thee pure [or beautiful] hymns."

R. V. i. 117, 25.—Etāni vām Aśvinā vīryāni pra pūrvyāni āyavaḥ avochan | brahma kṛinvanto vṛishanā yuvabhyāñ swī-rāso vidatham ā vadema | "These, your ancient exploits, o Aśvins, our fathers have declared. Let us, who are strong in bold men, making a hymn for you, o bountiful gods, utter our offering of praise."

R. V. ii. 39, 8.—Etāni vām Aśvinā vardhanāni brahma stomañ Gṛitsamadāsaḥ akran | "These magnifying prayers, [this] hymn, o Aśvins, the Gṛitsamadas have made for you."

R. V. iii. 30, 20.—Svavyavō matibhis tubhyañ viprā Indrāya vāhaḥ Kuśikāsaḥ akran | "Seeking heaven, the sage Kuśikas have made a hymn with praises to thee, o Indra." (The word vāhaḥ is stated by Sāyana to be = stotra, "a hymn.")

R. V. iv. 6, 11.—Akāri brahma samidhāna tubhyam ityādi | "O kindled [Agni], a prayer has been made to thee."

R. V. iv. 16, 20.—Eved Indrāya vṛishabhāya vṛishṇe brahma akarṇa Bhṛiyavo na ratham | . . . 21. Akāri te harivo brahma navyaṃ dhiyā syāma rathyaḥ sadāsāḥ | "Thus have we made a prayer for Indra, the productive, the vigorous, as the Bhṛigus [fashioned] a car. . . 21. A new prayer has been made for thee, o lord of steeds. May we, through our hymn (or rite) become possessed of chariots and perpetual wealth."

R. V. vii. 35, 14.—Ādityā Rudrā Vasavo jushanta (the Atharva-veda has jushantām) idam brahma kriyamānaṁ navī-yaḥ | śṛinvantu no divyāḥ pāṛthivāso gojātā ityādi | “May the Adityas, Rudras, and Vasus receive with pleasure this new prayer which is being made. May the gods of the air, the earth, and the sky hear us.”

R. V. vii. 37, 4.—Vayaṁ nu te dāśvānsaḥ syāma brahma kṛiṇvantaḥ ityādi | “Let us offer oblations to thee, making prayers,” etc.

R. V. vii. 97, 9.—Iyaṁ vām Brahmanaspate svṛiktir brahma Indrāya vajriṇe akāri | “Brahmanaspati, this pure hymn, [this] prayer has been made for thee, and for Indra, the thunderer.”

R. V. viii. 51, 4.—Āyāhi kṛiṇavāma te Indra brahmāni vard-dhanā ityādi | “Come, Indra : let us make prayers, which mag-nify thee,” etc.

R. V. x. 54, 6.—. . . Adha priyam bhūsham Indrāya manma brahmakṛito Vṛihadukthād avāchi | “. . . An acceptable and honorific hymn has been uttered to Indra by Vṛihaduktha, maker of prayers.”

R. V. x. 101, 2.—Mandrā kṛiṇudhvaṁ dhiya ā tanudhvaṁ nāvam aritra-paranīm kṛiṇudhvam | “Make hymns, prepare prayers, make a ship propelled by oars.”

It is possible that in some of these passages the verb kṛi may have merely the signification which the word make has in Eng-lish when we speak of “making supplications,” etc., in which case it of course means to offer up, rather than to compose. But this cannot be the case in such passages as R. V. iv. 16, 20 (p. 129), where the rishi speaks of making the hymn as the Bhrigus made a chariot. And such an interpretation would be altogether inadmissible in the case of the texts which I next proceed to cite.

II.—Passages in which the word tax, “to fashion, or fabri-cate,” is applied to the composition of the hymns.

R. V. i. 62, 13.—Sanāyate Gotamaḥ Indra navyam ataxad

brahma hariyojanāya ityādi | “Nodhas, descendant of Gotama, fashioned this new hymn for [thee], Indra, who art of old, and who yokest thy steeds,” etc.

R. V. i. 130, 6.—Imām te vācham vasūyantah Āyavo ratham na dhīrah svapā ataxishuh sumnāya tvām ataxishuh | “Desiring wealth, men have fashioned for thee this hymn, as a skilful workman [fabricates] a car, and thus they have disposed (lit. fashioned) thee to (confer) happiness.”

R. V. i. 171, 2.—Esha vah stomo Maruto namasvān hridā tashto manasā dhāyi devāh | “This reverential hymn, o divine Maruts, fashioned by the heart, has been presented by the mind [or, according to Sāyana, ‘let it be received by you with a favourable mind’].”

R. V. ii. 19, 8.—Evā te Gṛitsamadāh śūra manma avasyavo na vayunāni taxuh | “Thus, o hero, have the Gṛitsamadas, desiring succour, fashioned for thee a hymn, as men make roads.” (Sāyana explains vayuna by “road;” but it generally means knowledge.)

R. V. ii. 35, 2.—Imam su asma hridah ā sutashtam mantram vochema kuvid asya vedat | “Let us address to him from the heart this well-fashioned hymn; may he be aware of it.”

R. V. v. 2, 11.—Etam te stomaṁ tuvi-jāta vipro ratham na dhīrah svapā ataxam | “I, a sage, have fabricated this hymn for thee, o powerful [deity], as a skilful workman fashions a car.”

R. V. v. 29, 15.—Indra brahma kriyamānā jushasva yā te śavishṭha navyā akarma | vastreva bhadrā sukritā vasūyuh ratham na dhīrah svapā ataxam | “O mighty Indra, regard with favour the prayers which are made, the new [prayers] which we have made for thee. Desirous of wealth, I have fabricated them like beautiful well-fashioned garments, as a skilful workman [constructs] a car.” (Compare R. V. iii. 39, 2; above, p. 123).

R. V. v. 73, 10.—Imā brahmāni vardhanā Aśvibhyām santu śantamā | yā taxāma rathān iva avochāma bṛihad namaḥ |

“ May these magnifying prayers which we have fashioned, like cars, be pleasing to the Ásvins : we have uttered great adoration.”

R. V. vi. 32, 1 (= S. V. i. 322).—Apūrvyā purutamāni asmai mahe vīrāya tavase turāya | virapśīne vajriṇe śantamāni vachāṁsi āsā sthavirāya taxam | “ To this great hero, vigorous, energetic, the adorable, unshaken thunderer, I have with my mouth fabricated copious and pleasing prayers, which had never before existed.”

R. V. vi. 16, 47.—Ā te Agne řichā havir hridā tasṣṭam bharāmasi | “ In this verse, Agni, we bring to thee an oblation fabricated by the heart.” (Comp. R. V. iii. 39, 1, in p. 123.)

R. V. vii. 7, 6.—Ete dyumnebhīr viśvam ātiranta mantraṁ ye vā araṁ naryā ataxan | “ These men who have skilfully fabricated the hymn, have by their praises [?] augmented all [their possessions ?].”

R. V. vii. 64, 4.—Yo vām garttam manasā taxad etam ūrddhvām dhītiṁ kṛiṇavad dhārayachcha | “ May he who with his mind fashioned for you (Mitra and Varuna) this car, make and sustain the lofty hymn.” (The same expression ūrddhvā dhītiḥ occurs in R. V. i. 119, 2.)

R. V. viii. 6, 33.—Uta brahmanyā vayam tubhyam pravṛiddha vajrīvo viprā ataxma jīvase | “ O mighty thunderer, we, who are sage, have fabricated prayers [or ceremonies] for thee, that we may live.” (I take brahmanyā for the neuter plural, as it has no visarga in my copy of the R. V.)

R. V. x. 39, 14.—Etam vām stomam Ásvināv akarma ataxāma Bhrīgavo na ratham | ni amṛicāma yohanām na maryye nityam na sūnuṁ tanayam dadhānāḥ | “ This hymn, Asvins, we have made for you; we have fabricated it as the Bhrigus [constructed] a car [or we have, like the Bhrigus, fabricated a car]; we have decorated it, as a bride for her husband, continuing the series [of our praises] like an unbroken line of descendants.”

(The following is Sāyana's comment on this passage, for a copy of which I am indebted to Professor Müller: He Ásvināu praise of you. He explains this. Like the Bhrigus, we have made a car, we have carefully constructed a hymn. The Ribhus are, from this work being ascribed to them [?], styled Bhrigus; or bhrigus are chariot-makers. Moreover, maintaining this praise as a constant perpetuator (like a legitimate son) of sacrifice and other rites, we have polished, i.e., carefully composed a celebration of you among men [?]”. (In this comment the word yoshaṇā is left unexplained. In verse 12 of this hymn the Aśvins are supplicated to come in a car fleetier than thought, constructed for them by the Ribhus:—ā tena yātam manaso javīyasā rathaṁ yaṁ vām Ribhavaś chakrur Aśvinā |)

R. V. x. 80, 7.—Agnaye brahma Ribhavas tataxuh | “The Ribhus [or the wise] fabricated a hymn for Agni.”

III.—I next quote some texts in which the hymns are spoken of as being generated by the rishis. (Comp. R. V. vii. 93, 1, in p. 125.)

R. V. iii. 2. 1.—Vaiśvānarāya dhishaṇām ritāvṛidhe ghṛitaṁ na pūtam Agnaye janāmasi | “We generate a hymn, like pure butter, for Agni Vaiśvānara, who promotes our sacred rites.”

R. V. vii. 15, 4.—Navāñ nu stomañ Agnaye divaḥ śyenāya jījanam | vasvaḥ kuvīd vanāti naḥ | “I have generated a new hymn to Agni, the falcon of the sky; who bestows on us wealth in abundance.”

R. V. vii. 22, 9.—Ye cha pūrve ṛishayo ye cha nūtnāḥ Indra brahmāñi janayanta vipraḥ | “Indra, the wise rishis, both ancient and modern, have generated prayers.”

R. V. vii. 26, 1.—*Na somaḥ Indram asuto mamāda na
abrahmāño maghavānaṁ sutāsaḥ | tasmāy ukthaṁ janaye yaḥ*

jujoshad nṛivad navīyaḥ śrinavad yathā naḥ | “The soma cheers not Indra unless it be poured out; nor do libations [gratify] Maghavan when offered without a priest. To him I generate a hymn such as may please him, that, after the manner of men, he may hear our new [song].”

R. V. vii. 31, 11.— . . . Suṛiktim Indrāya brahma janayanta viprāḥ | “The sages generated a pure hymn and a prayer for Indra.”

R. V. vii. 94, 1, 2 (= S. V. ii. 266).—Iyām vām asya manmanaḥ Indrāgnī pūrvya-stutir abhrād vṛiṣṭir iva ajani | sr̥ṇutām jaritur havam ityādi | “The excellent praise of this hymn [or the excellent hymn of this sage] has been generated [or, has sprung] for you, Indra and Agni, like rain from a cloud. Hear the invocation of your worshipper,” etc. (Benfey thinks manman, “spirit,” is to be understood of Soma, whose hymn, i.e., the sound of his dropping, resembles the falling of rain. The scholiast of the S. V. makes manman = stotri, “worshipper”).

R. V. viii. 43, 2.—Asmai te pratiharyate Jātavedo vicharshane Agne janāmi susṭutim | “Wise Agni Jātavedas, I generate a hymn for thee, who receivest it with favour.”

R. V. viii. 77, 4.—Ā tvā ayam arka utaye vavarttati yaṁ Gotamā ajījanan | “This hymn which the Gotamas have generated, incites thee to succour us.”

R. V. viii. 84, 4, 5.—Śrudhi havam Tiraśchyāḥ Indra yas tvā saparyati suvīryasya gomato rāyaḥ pūrdhi mahān asi | Indra yas te navīyasīm giram mandrām ajījanat chikītvīn-manasaṁ dhiyam pratnām ṛitasya pipyushīm | “Hear, Indra, the invocation of Tiraśchī, thy worshipper; replenish him with wealth in strong men and in cattle, for thou art great. Indra [do this for him] who has generated for thee a new and exhilarating hymn, springing from an intelligent mind, an ancient mental product, full of sacred truth.”

(These verses occur also in the Sāma-veda ii. 233, 234, and are translated by Professor Benfey, at pp. 230, and 250, of his edition. The hymn referred to in this passage is apparently designated as both new and old. How can it be both? It may have been an old hymn re-written and embellished; ancient in substance, though new in expression. Compare St. John's Gospel, xiii. 34, and the First Epistle of St. John, ii. 7, 8, and iii. 11.)

R. V. ix. 73, 2.— . . . madhor dhārābhīr janayanto arkam it priyām Indrasya tanvam avīridhan | “Together with the honied streams, generating the hymn, they have augmented the beloved body of Indra.”

R. V. ix. 95, 1 (= S. V. i. 530).— . . . ato matīr janayata svadhābhīḥ | “Wherefore generate hymns with the oblations.” (Professor Benfey makes janayata the 3rd person singular of the imperfect middle, and applies it to Soma).

R. V. x. 7, 2.—Imā Agne matayas tubhyaṁ jātāḥ gobhīr aśvair abhī grīnanti rādhaḥ | “These hymns, Agni, generated for thee, supplicate [?] wealth with [or celebrate thy wealth in] cows and horses.”

R. V. x. 23, 5, 6, 7.—Yo vāchā vivācho mṛidhravāchaḥ purū sahasrā aśivā jaghāna | Tat tad id asya pauṁsyaṁ grīnīmasi pītā iva yas tavishīm vāvridhe śavaḥ | stomaṁ te Indra Vimadā ajījanann apūrvyam purutamaṁ sudānave | Vidmā hi asya bhōjanam inasya yad ā paśuṁ na gopāḥ karāmahe | mā kir nah enā sakhyā viyaushus tava cha Indra Vimadasya cha řisheḥ | Vidmā hi te pramatīm deva jāmi-vad asme te santu sakhyā śivāni | “Who (Indra) with his voice slew many thousand of the wicked uttering confused and hostile cries. We laud his several acts of valour, who, like a father, augmented [?] our vigour and our strength. For thee, o Indra, who art bountiful, the Vimadas have generated a copious hymn, which never before existed (apūrvya); for we know what is gratifying to this our master; and we collect it together, as a cowherd assembles his cattle. Indra, may that friendship of ours never be dissolved, which exists between thee and the rishi Vimada: for we know thy wisdom, o god; may thy friendship be favourable to us, like that of a kinsman.”

R. V. x. 67, 1.—Imām dhiyam saptasīrshnīm pitā nah ṛita-prajātām bṛihatīm avindat | turīyam svī janayad vīsvajanyo Ayāsya uktham Indrāya śansan | “Our father hath discovered [or invented] this great, seven-headed hymn, born of sacred truth; Ayāsya, friend of all men, celebrating Indra, has generated the fourth song of praise.” (In his Lexicon, Roth gives Ayāsya as a proper name; but says it may also be an adjective with the sense of “unwearied.”)

R. V. x. 91, 14.—Kīlāla-pe soma-pṛishtëya vedhase hṛidā matīm janaye chārum Agnaye | “With my heart I generate a beautiful hymn for Agni, the drinker of nectar, the soma-sprinkled, the wise.” (See also R. V. i. 109, 1, 2, which will be quoted below.)

IV.—In the following texts the verbal root ṛi, “to move, send forth,” etc., used with or without a preposition, is applied to the utterance or (it may even mean) the production of hymns.

R. V. i. 116, 1.—Nāsatyābhyām barkir iva pravṛiṇje stomān iyarmi abhriyā iva vātaḥ | yāv arbhaḡāya Vimadāya jāyām senā-juvā ni ūhatuḥ rathena | “In like manner as I spread the sacrificial grass to the Nāsatyas (Aśvins), so do I send forth to them hymns, as the wind [drives] the clouds; to them (I say), who bore off to the youthful Vimada his bride in a chariot which outstripped the enemy’s host.”

R. V. vii. 61, 2.—Pra vām sa Mitrā-Varuṇau ṛitāvā vipro manmāni dīrgha-śrud iyartti | Yasya brahmāni suktratū avāthah ā yat kratvā na śaradaḥ pṛinaithe [?] | “The devout sage, deeply versed in sacred lore, sends forth his hymns to you, o Mitra and Varuna. You, mighty gods, receive his prayers with favour, since ye fill [prolong?], as it seems, his autumns by your power.”

R. V. viii. 12, 31.—Imām te Indra sushtutīm viprah iyartti dhṛtibhiḥ | jāmin padā iva pipratīm pra adhvare | “The sage, with praises, sends forth to thee this hymn, which like a sister follows [?] thy steps in the sacrifice.”

R. V. viii. 13, 26.— . . . Ṛitād iyarmi te dhiyam manoyujam |

“ . . . From the sacred ceremony I send forth a prayer, issuing from my mind [or, which will reach thy heart ?] ”

R. V. x. 116, 9.—Pra Indrāgnibhyām svachasyām iyarmi sindhāv iva prerayaṁ nāvam arkaiḥ | “ I send forth a [hymn] with beautiful words to Indra and Agni ; with my praises I have, as it were, launched a ship on the sea.”

(Compare R. V. ii. 42, 1, spoken of Indra in the form of the bird called kapinjala, a sort of partridge : Iyartti vācham ariteva nāvam | “ It sends forth a voice, as a rower propels a boat.” See also R. V. x. 101, 2, quoted above, p. 130.)

V.—In the following passages, other verbs are employed to denote the composition or presentation of hymns.

R. V. i. 61, 2.—Indrāya hṛidā manasā manīshā pratnāya patye dhīyo marjayanta | “ To Indra, the ancient lord, they prepared [or polished] hymns [or ceremonies] with the heart, mind, and understanding.”

R. V. i. 61, 4.—Asmai id u stomaṁ saṁhīnomi rathaṁ na tashṭā iva tat-sināya ityādi | “ To him (Indra) I send forth a hymn, as a carpenter a car, for his food,” etc.

R. V. i. 94, 1 (= S. V. i. 66).—Imaṁ stomam arkate Jātavedase ratham iva sam mahemā manīshayā | bhadrā hi naḥ pramatir asya saṁsadi Agne sakhye mā rishāmā vayaṁ tava | “ Let us with our intellects decorate this hymn for the adorable Jātavedas like a car, for his wisdom is favourable to us in the assembly. Agni, in thy friendship may we never suffer.” (The root mah means to honour or worship. I have partly followed Benfey’s translation.)

There is to be found in the hymns a great multitude of passages in which the rishi speaks of presenting his hymns and prayers to the various deities who are the objects of his worship, without directly claiming for himself the authorship of those compositions. The natural inference to be drawn from the expressions which we shall find to be employed in most of the cases to which I refer, would, I think, be that the personality of the rishi himself was uppermost in his mind, and that he was not conscious that the praises which he was uttering to the gods proceeded from any other source than his own unaided faculties. Of this description are the following texts, which represent a manner of thinking and speaking very prevalent in the hymns.

R. V. i. 60, 5.—Tam tvā vayam patim Agne rayīnām praśamsāmo matibhīr Gotamāsaḥ | “We, the Gotamas, praise with hymns thee, Agni, the lord of riches.”

R. V. i. 77, 5.—Eva Agnir Gotamebhīr ṛitāvā viprebhīr astoshṭa jātavedaḥ | “Thus has the holy Agni Jātavedas been celebrated by the sage Gotamas.”

R. V. i. 78, 5.—Avochāma Rahūganā Agnaye madhumad vachāḥ | dyumnair abhi pra nonumaḥ | “We, the Rahūganas, have uttered to Agni a honied speech; we laud him with eulogies.”

R. V. i. 91, 11.—Soma gīrbhis tvā vyaṁ vardhayāmo vachovidāḥ | sumṛilīko na āviśa | “Soma, we who are skilled in speech magnify thee with praises; do thou enter into us, bringing joy.”

R. V. i. 102, 1.—Imāṁ te dhīyam prabhare maho mahim asya stotre dhishanā yat te ānaje | “I present to thee, the great (god) this great hymn, because thy understanding has taken pleasure in my praises.”

(Sāyana renders prabhare by prakarshena sampādayāmi | “I carefully make or accomplish.” Roth renders ānaje “has been honoured.” See his Lexicon, under the word añj.)

R. V. i. 183, 6.—Atārishma tamāsaḥ pāram asya prati vāṁ stomo Aśvināv adhāyi | “We have crossed over this darkness; a hymn, o Aśvins, has been addressed to you.”

R. V. iv. 3, 16.—Etā viśvā vidushe tubhyaṁ vedho nīthāni Agne ninyā vachāṁsi | nivachanā kavaye kāvyāni aśaṁsisham matibhīr vipraḥ ukthaiḥ | “Prudent Agni, to thee, who art wise, [have I uttered] all these songs and mysterious words; to thee, who art a bard, have I, a sage, uttered these hymns, these poems, with meditations and praises.”

R. V. iv. 32, 12.—Avīṛidhanta Gotamā Indra tve stomavā-

hasaḥ | “The Ḡotamas, Indra, bringing hymns to thee, have magnified thee.”

R. V. v. 11, 5.—Tubhya idam Agne madhumattamaṁ vachas tubham manīshā iyam astu śaṁ hrīde | Tvāṁ giraḥ sindhum iva avanīr mahīr ā prinanti śavasā vardhayanti cha | “Agni, may this sweetest of prayers, may this hymn (mental production) be pleasant to thy heart. As great rivers fill the ocean, so do the words of praise fill thee, and augment thee with strength.”

R. V. v. 22, 4.—Agne chikiddhi asya naḥ idam vachaḥ sahasya | Taṁ tvā suśipra dampate stomair vardhanti Atrato gīrbhiḥ śumbhanti Atrayaḥ | “Vigorous Agni, know these our words; thee, with the beautiful nose, the lord of the house, the Atris magnify with praises, the Atris decorate with hymns.”

R. V. v. 45, 4.—Suktebhīr vo vachobhīr devajushtair Indrā nu Agnī avase huvadhyai | ukthebhīr hi sma kavayaḥ suyajñā āvivāsanto Maruto yajanti | “Let me invoke you for help, o Indra and Agni, with well-spoken words, such as are acceptable to the gods; for sages skilled in sacrifice, when performing sacred rites, quick as the Maruts [?], worship with hymns.”

R. V. vi. 38, 3.—Taṁ vo dhīyā paramayā purājām ajaram Indram abhi anūshī arkaiḥ ityādi | “I adore thee, the ancient, imperishable Indra with an excellent hymn and with praises.”

R. V. vii. 67, 5.—Prāchīm ū devā Śśvinā dhīyam me amṛīdhrām sātaye kṛitam vasūyum | “O divine Śśvins, make my early and unwearied prayer which supplicates wealth, to be productive of blessings.”

R. V. vii. 85, 1.—Punīshe vām araxasam manīshām somam Indrāya Varuṇāya juvat | ghṛita-pratīkām Uhasam na devīm ityādi | “Offering soma to Indra and Varuna, I purify for you twain the sincere hymn, like the goddess Ushas, with glittering face.”

R. V. viii. 5, 18.—Asmākam adya vām ayaṁ stomo vāhishṭho antamaḥ | yuvābhyaṁ bhātu Śśvinā | “May this hymn of ours approach near to you, to-day, o Śśvins, and be effectual in bearing you hither.”

R. V. viii. 8, 8.—Kim anye paryāsate asmat stomebhir Aśvinā | putraḥ Kanvasya vām ṛishir gīrbhir Vatsa avīṛidhat | “Aśvins, do others than we [?] sit round you with songs? Vatsa, the son of Kanva, has magnified you by his hymns.”

R. V. viii. 27, 11.—Idā hi va upastutim idā vāmasya bhaktaye upa vo viśvavedaso namasyur āṣṛixi | “For now, possessors of all riches, now, in order to obtain wealth, have I, full of devotion, sent forth to you a hymn.”

R. V. x. 42. 1.—Astā iva suprataraṁ lāyam asyan bhūshann iva prabhara stomam asmai | vāchā viprās tarata vācham aryo nīramaya jaritaḥ some Indram | “Like an archer discharging his far-shooting arrow, or as it were making decorations, present the hymn to Indra. Sages, by your song, overcome the song of the enemy; worshipper, arrest Indra at the soma.”

R. V. x. 63, 17.—Eva Plateḥ sūnur avīṛidhad vo viśve Ādityā Adite manīshī | isānāso naro amartyena astāvi jano divyo Gayena | “Thus, all ye Adityas, Aditi, and ye ruling powers, has the wise son of Plati magnified you. The celestial race has been lauded by the immortal Gaya.” (I am unable to say in what sense the rishi here speaks of himself as immortal.)

R. V. x. 111, 1.—Manīshināḥ prabharadhvam manīshām yathā yathā matayaḥ santi nṛīnam | Indraṁ satyair ā īrayāma kṛitebhīḥ sa hi vīro girvanasyur vidānaḥ | “Sages, present the prayer, according as are the thoughts of men. Let us by our sincere rites stimulate [?] Indra, for he is a hero, he is wise, and loves our songs.”

In the following verse, from a hymn in praise of liberality, it is said, though no doubt only figuratively, that the true rishi is the prince who is bountiful to the priesthood.

R. V. x. 107, 6.—Tam eva ṛishim tam ū brahmānam āhur yajñanyaṁ sāmagam ukthaśasam | sa śukrasya tanvo veda tisroyaḥ prathamo daxīnayā rarādha | “He it is whom they call a rishi, a priest, a pious sacrificer, a chaunter of prayers, a singer of hymns; he it is who knows the three bodies of brilliant (Agni),—the man who is most prominent in bestowing gifts.”

SECT. IV.—Passages of the Rig-veda in which a supernatural character is ascribed to the rishis or the hymns.

In the present section I propose to collect the most distinct indications which I have noticed in the vedic hymns of any supernatural attributes attaching, in the opinion of the authors, either to the rishis themselves, or to their compositions. We shall see in the course of this enquiry (I.), that a certain superhuman character was ascribed by the later rishis, who composed the hymns, to some of their predecessors; (II.) that expressions are occasionally employed by the rishis which appear to ascribe their compositions to a divine influence generally; while there is a still more numerous set of texts in which the hymns are attributed in various forms of phraseology to the agency of one or more particular and specified deities; and (III.) that there is a considerable number of passages in which a mysterious or magical power is ascribed to the hymns or metres.

I proceed to furnish specimens of these several classes of quotations.

I.—I adduce some passages which ascribe a superhuman character or supernatural faculties to the earlier rishis. These are the following:—

R. V. i. 179, 2.—Ye chid hi pūrve ṛitasāpaḥ āsan sākaṁ devebhīr avadann ṛitāni | te chid avāsura ityādi | “The pious sages who lived of old, and who conversed about sacred truths with the gods, led a conjugal life,” etc.

The sixty-second hymn of the tenth Mandala contains the following passage regarding the Angirases (see above, p. 120):—

1. The Angirases.—R. V. x. 62, 1, 3.—Ye yajñena daxinayā samaktāḥ Indrasya sakhyam amṛitatvam ānaśa | tebhyo bhadrām Angiraso vaḥ astu prati gribhñīta mānavam sumedhasaḥ | 3. Ye ṛitena sūryam arohayan divi aprathayan pṛithivīm mātaram vi ityādi | “Blessings be on the Angirases who, sanctified by sacrifice and liberality, attained the friendship of Indra and immortality. Do ye, o sage Angirases, graciously receive the race of Manu. 3. They who by sacrifice caused the sun to ascend the sky; and spread out our mother earth," etc. (My copy of the R. V. reads in the first line ānaśa. Perhaps it should be ānasuḥ, as in R. V. i. 164, 23.)

This is succeeded by the following verses:—

R. V. x. 62, 4, 5.—Ayaṁ nābhā vadati valguvo grihe deva-putrāḥ ṛishayas tat śrinotana . . . | virūpāsaḥ id ṛishayas te id gambhīra-vepasah | Aṅgirasah sūnavas te Agneḥ pariṃjajñire | "This sage addresses you, brilliant beings, within [?] the house. Hear this, ye rishis, sons of the gods. The rishis are various in character, profound in emotion; they are the sons of Angiras; they have been born from Agni."

(The last verse is quoted in the Nirukta, xi. 17. See Roth's illustrations of the passage.)

2. Vasishtha.—A supernatural character is attributed to Vasishtha also in the following passage (portions of which have been already quoted and illustrated in Part First, pp. 75 ff. and 122.)

R. V. vii. 33, 7 ff.—Trayaḥ kṛiṇvanti bhuvanasya retas tisraḥ prajāḥ āryāḥ jyotir-agrāḥ | trayo gharmāsaḥ ushasaṁ sachante sarvān it tān anuvidur Vasishthāḥ | 8. Sūryasyeva vaxatho jyotir eshāṁ samudrasyeva mahimā gabhīraḥ | vātasyeva prajavo na anyena stomo Vasishthā anu etave vaḥ | 9. Te id niṇyam hṛidayasya praketaiḥ sahasra-valśam abhi sañcharanti | yamena tatam paridhīm vayantaḥ apsarasaḥ upa sedur Vasishthāḥ | 10. Vidyuto jyotiḥ parisañjihānam Mitrā-Varuṇā yad apaśyatāṁ tvā | tat te janma uta ekaṁ Vasishtha Agastyo yat tvā viśaḥ ājabhāra | 11. Utāsi Maitrāvaruṇo Vasishtha Urvaśyāḥ brahman manaso 'dhi jātaḥ | drapsaṁ skannam brahmanā daivyena viśve devāḥ pushkare tvā adadanta | 12. Saḥ praketaḥ ubhayasya pravidvān sahasra-dānaḥ uta vā sadānaḥ | yamena tatam paridhīm vayishyan apsarasaḥ pariṃjajñe Vasishthāḥ | 13. Satre ha jātāv ishitā namobhīḥ kumbhe retaḥ sisichituḥ samānam | tato ha Mānaḥ udiyāya madhyāt tato jātam ṛishim āhur Vasishtham | 14. Uktha-bhṛitam sāma-bhṛitam bibhartti grāvānam bibhrad

pra vadāti agre | upa enam ādhvañ sumanasyamānāḥ ā vo gachhāti pratṛido Vasishṭhaḥ | “Three [gods] create the fecundating principle of the world; [there exist] three excellent productions of which light is the first: three fires attend upon the dawn: all these the Vasishthas know. The splendour of these [sages] is like the glory of the sun; their grandeur is profound as that of the ocean; their impetuosity is like that of the wind; your hymns, o Vasishthas, cannot be rivalled by any other bard. Through the longings of their hearts they seek after the mysterious [tree?] with a thousand branches; weaving the veil extended by Yama [Agni? see R. V. i. 66, 4.] the Vasishthas sat near the Apsaras. When Mitra and Varuna saw thee embracing the gleam of the lightning, that was thy birth, Vasishtha, and [thou hadst] one [other], when Agastya brought thee from the house. And, Vasishtha, thou art the son of Mitra and Varuna, born, o priest, from the mind of Urvaśī; all the gods received thee—the drop fallen through divine energy,—in the vessel. He the wise, knowing both [worlds?], lavishing a thousand gifts or all gifts, Vasishtha, seeking to weave the veil extended by Yama, was produced from the Apsaras. Born at the sacrifice, and impelled by adorations, they [Mitra and Varuna] let the same procreative energy fall into the jar; from the midst of this Māna (Agastya) issued forth; from this men say the rishi Vasishtha was produced. He directs [?] the singer of the uktha and the chaunter of the sāman; handling the soma stones, he leads the hymn; wait on him with reverence and good-will; Vasishtha comes to you.”

(Two of these verses are quoted in the Nirukta, verse 8, in xi. 20, and verse 11, in v. 13, 14. See also Prof. Roth's illustrations, p. 64, where he states his opinion that the foregoing verses which describe the miraculous birth of Vasishtha in the style of the epic mythology, are a later addition to an older hymn. I am unable to state the meaning of the word pratṛidaḥ.)

The two following passages also have reference to knowledge supernaturally communicated, or favours divinely conferred on Vasishtha. See Part First, p. 77.

R. V. vii. 87, 4.—Uvācha me Varuṇo medhīrāya triḥ sapta nāma aghnyā bibhartti | vidvān padasya guhyā na vohad yugāya vipraḥ uparāya śixan | “Varuna said to me, the sage, ‘the cow has thrice seven names.’ The wise and intelligent [god] instructing us, has declared the secrets of the celestial region [?] to this later generation.”

R. V. vii. 88, 4.—Vasishṭham ha Varuṇo nāvi ādhād ṛishiṃ chakāra svapā mahobhīḥ | stotāram vipraḥ sudīnatve ahnāṃ yād nu dyāvās tatanan yād ushasaḥ | “Varuna has placed Vasishtha in the ship; the beneficent [deity] has, by his mighty deeds, made him a rishi, [and caused] his worshipper to enjoy a fortunate existence, so that his days and dawns have been prolonged.” (See Part First, p. 77, note 32; and R. V. x. 101, 2, and x. 116, 9, in pp. 130 and 137, above.)

3. Viśvāmitra.—In one or more of the texts which I shall next produce, a superhuman character is ascribed to Viśvāmitra and the Kuśikas.

R. V. iii. 29, 15.—Amitrāyudho marutām iva prayāḥ prathamajāḥ brahmaṇo viśvam id viduḥ | dyumnavad brahma Kuśikāsa erire ekaḥ eko dame Agniṃ samīdhire | “Combating their foes, like hosts of Maruts, the first-born of Brahma [or prayer?] are masters of all knowledge; the Kuśikas have uttered a prayer accompanied with oblations; every one of them has kindled Agni in his house.” (See Part First, p. 125, note.)

R. V. iii. 43, 5.—Kuvid mā gopāṃ karase janasya kuvid rājānam Maghavann ṛijīshan | kuvid mā ṛishiṃ papivāṃsaṃ sutasya kuvid me vasvaḥ amṛitasya śixāḥ | “Thou assuredly makest me a shepherd of men; thou assuredly makest me a king, o impetuous Maghavan; thou assuredly makest me a rishi, a drinker of the soma; thou wilt assuredly bestow upon me imperishable wealth.” (See First Part, p. 85.)

R. V. iii. 53, 9.—Māhan ṛishīr devajāḥ devajūtaḥ astabhāt sindhum arṇavaṃ nṛichaxāḥ | Viśvāmitro yad avahat Sudāsam

apriyāyata Kuśikebhir Indraḥ | “The great rishi (Visvāmitra), director of men, sprung from the gods, and god-impelled, stemmed the watery current. When Visvāmitra guided Sudās, Indra was propitiated through the Kuśikas.” (See Part First, pp. 124, 125. Indra himself is called a Kauśika in R. V. i. 10, 11. See Part First, p. 82.)

According to R. V. ix. 87, 3, certain mysterious knowledge is said to have been possessed by Uśanas: Rishir vipraḥ pura-etā janānām ṛibhur dhīra Uśanā kāryeṇa | sa chid viveda nihītaṁ yad āsām apīchyaṁ guhyaṁ nāma gonām | “A wise rishi, a leader of men, skilful, and prudent, is Uśanas, through his insight as a seer; he has known the hidden mysterious name applied to these cows.”

In some hymns of the tenth Mandala, the rishis are spoken of as “seeing” different objects of contemplation; thus in R. V. x. 72, 1, 2, it is said: Devānām nu vayaṁ jānā prarochāma vipanyayā | uktheshu śasyamāneshu yaḥ pśyād uttare yuge | Brahmanaspatir etā saṁ karmāra iva adhamat devānām pūrve yuge asataḥ sad ajāyata | “Let us, from the love of praise, celebrate in chaunted songs the births of the gods—any of us who in this later generation may behold them. Brahmanaspati has kindled these births, as a blacksmith [blows a flame]: in the earliest age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent.”

And in R. V. x. 79, 1, the rishi says: Apśyam asya mahato mahītvam amartyasya martyāsu vixu | “I beheld the greatness of this great immortal among the race of mortals.” (Here, however, as Agni is the subject, the poet might easily enough see him, while his imagination would supply the figurative attributes which he goes on to describe.)

A still more decided instance, however, of this use of the verb to see, in the sense of supernatural insight, may be found in the verse of the Vālahilya already quoted in Part Second, pp. 220, which will be repeated below.

The next two passages speak of the radiance of the rishis.

R. V. viii. 3, 3 (= S. V. i. 250 and Vāj. S. 33, 81).—Imā u tvā purūvaso giro vardhantu yā mama | pāvaka-varṇāḥ śūchayo vipaśchitaḥ abhi stomair anūshata | “Lord of abundant wealth, may these prayers of mine magnify thee! Pure sages of fiery radiance have celebrated thee with hymns.”

R. V. viii. 6, 10.—Aham id hi pituḥ pari medhām ṛitasya jagrabha | aham sūrya iva ajani | “I have acquired the wisdom of [my] righteous father; I have become like the sun.”

The following texts, which occur in the last book of the Rigveda, speak of tapas (“devotion” or “austerity”) being practised by the rishis much in the same way as the later epic literature does. This use of the word is not known in the earlier books of the R. V. (See Boehtlingk and Roth’s Lexicon, under the word tapas.)

R. V. x. 109, 4.—Devā etasyām avadanta pūrve sapta ṛishayas tapase ye nisheduḥ | “The ancient gods spoke of her, the seven rishis who sat down for devotion.”

R. V. x. 154, 2.—Tapasā ye anādhrīśyās tapasā ye svar yayuḥ | tapo ye chakrīre mahas tāms chid eva api gachchatāt | 5. Sahasra-nūthāḥ kavayo ye gopāyanti sūryam ṛishīmś tapasvato Yama tapojān api gachhatāt | “Come to those who through devotion are invincible, who by devotion have gone to heaven, who have performed great austerity. 5. Come, Yama, to the sages of a thousand songs who guard the sun (see Wilson, Vish. Pur. pp. 234, 235), to the devout rishis, whose nature is devotion.”

R. V. x. 190, 1.—Ritañcha satyañcha abhīddhāt tapaso adhyajāyata | tato rātrī ajāyata tataḥ samudrah arṇavaḥ | “Right and truth sprang from kindled devotion; thence sprang night, thence the watery ocean.”

In R. V. x. 167, 1, it is even said that Indra attained heaven by austerity: Tvaṁ tapaḥ paritapyā ajayaḥ svaḥ | “By performing austerity thou didst conquer heaven.”

In some places the gods are said to possess in the most emiment degree the qualities of rishis, or kavis. This may imply, e converso, that the rishis were conscious of a certain affinity with the divine nature, and conceived themselves to participate in some degree in the superior wisdom and knowledge of the deities.

R. V. i. 31, 1.—Tvam Agne prathamo Angirā rishir devo devānām abhavaḥ śivaḥ sakhā ityādi | 2. Tvam Agne prathamo Angirastamaḥ kavir devānām paribhūshasi vratam | “Thou, Agni, the earliest rishi Angiras, a god, wast the auspicious friend of the gods. . . . Thou, Agni, the earliest and most Angiras-like sage, decoratest the ceremonial of the gods.”

R. V. i. 66, 2.—. . . Rishir na stubhvā vixu praśustaḥ ityādi | “Like a rishi, who praises [the gods], he (Agni) is famous among the people,” etc.

R. V. iii. 21, 3.—. . . Rishih śreshtah samidhyase yajñasya pra avitā bhava | “Thou, Agni, the most eminent rishi, art kindled; be the protector of the sacrifice.”

R. V. v. 29, 1.—. . . Archanti tvā marutaḥ pūta-daxās tvam eshām rishir Indra asi dhīraḥ | “The Maruts, endowed with pure force, worship thee; thou, Indra, art their rishi.” (Sāyana, however, here renders rishi by drashṭā, “beholder.”)

R. V. vi. 14, 2.—Agnir id hi prachetāḥ Agnir vedhastamaḥ rishih | “Agni is wise; Agni is a most sage rishi.”

R. V. viii. 6, 41.—Rishir hi pūrvajā asi ekah īśanaḥ ojasā Indra choshkūyase vasu | “Thou art an anciently-born rishi, who alone rulest by thy might; Indra, thou lavishest riches.”

R. V. viii. 16, 7.—Indro brahmā Indrah rishir Indrah purū-puru-hūtaḥ | mahān mahībhīḥ śachībhīḥ | “Indra is a priest, Indra is a rishi, Indra is much invoked; he is great through his great exploits.”

R. V. ix. 96, 18 (= S. V. ii. 526).—Rishimanā yah rishikṛit svarshāḥ sahasranīthaḥ padavīḥ kavīnām | “Soma, rishi-minded, rishi-maker, bestower of good, lord of a thousand songs, the path [leader?] of sages,” etc.

R. V. ix. 107, 7.—. . . Rishir vipro vichaxaṇas tvam kavir

abhavo devavītamah ityādi | “A rishi, a sage, intelligent, thou (Soma) wast a poet, most devoted to the gods,” etc.

R. V. x. 27, 22.—. . . Indrāya sunvad ṛishaye cha śizat | “. . . Let [men] present libations to Indra, and offerings to the rishi.”

R. V. x. 112, 9.—Nī shu sīda ganapate ganeshu tvām āhur vipratamaṁ kavīnām | na ṛite tvat kriyate kīñchana āre mahām arkam Maghavanś chitram archa | “Sit, lord of multitudes, among our multitudes; they call thee the greatest of sages [or poets]; nothing is done without, or apart from, thee; receive, Maghavan, our great and beautiful hymn.”

R. V. x. 115, 5.—Agniḥ kaṇvatamaḥ kaṇva-sakhā ityādi | “Agni is the greatest of the Kanvas, the friend of Kanva,” etc.

II.—The Vedic rishis, as we have seen, expected to receive from their gods every variety of temporal blessings, strength, long life, offspring, riches, cattle, rain, food, and victory, and they also looked for forgiveness of their offences, and exaltation to paradise, to the same benefactors. Hence it would be nothing more than we might have anticipated, if we should further find them asking their different deities to enlighten their minds, to direct their ceremonies, to stimulate their devotion, to augment their powers of poetical expression, and to inspire them with religious fervour for the composition of their hymns. I think the following passages will justify this expectation by showing that the rishis (though, as we have seen, they frequently speak of the hymns as their own work) did also sometimes entertain the idea that their prayers, praises, and ceremonies generally, were supernaturally suggested and directed. One of the modes (if not the principal one) in which this idea is expressed is, as we shall discover, the personification of speech under different appellations. The following are the passages to which I refer: they are—

First, such as refer to the gods generally:

R. V. i. 37, 4.—Pra vah śardhāya ghrīshvaye tvesha-dyumnāya śushmīne | brahma devattaṁ gāyata | “To [that which is] your strength, the vigorous, overpowering, energetic, [host of Maruts] sing the god-given prayer." (See, however, Part Second, p. 219, note 174.)

S. V. i. 299.—Tvashṭā no daivyaṃ vachah Parjanya Brahmanaspatiḥ | putrair bhrātrībhīr Aditir nu pātu no duṣṭaram trāmaṇaṃ vachah | "May Tvastri, Parjanya, and Brahmanaspati [prosper] our divine utterance: may Aditi with her [?] sons and brothers prosper our invincible and protective utterance."

In the next passage, the hymn or prayer is spoken of as inconceivable.

R. V. i. 152, 5.—Achittam brahma jujushur yuvānaḥ pra Mitre dhāma Varuṇe gṛinantah | "The youths received with joy the incomprehensible prayer, celebrating the glorious abode in Mitra and Varuna [?]."

(Though Sāyana, in his comment on this passage, does not give to the word yuvānaḥ the sense of youths, he interprets it so, and explains it of the Maruts, in his note on R. V. i. 165, 2.)

In R. V. x. 20, 10, Vimada, a rishi, is connected with the immortals:—Agne Vimado maṇīśhām ūrjonapād amṛitebhīḥ sajośhā girah āvaxat sumatīr iyānaḥ ityādī | "O Agni, son of strength, Vimada, united with the immortals, hastening, has brought to thee a product of thought, and beautiful hymns."

In the two following texts the gods are said to have generated the hymn or prayer:

R. V. viii. 88, 4.—Sūkta-vākam prathamam ād id Agnim ād id havir ajanayanta devāḥ | sa eshām yajño abhavat tanūpāḥ | "The gods first generated the hymn, then Agni, then the oblation. This sacrifice was the protector of their life."

R. V. x. 61, 7.—. . . Svādhyo ajanayan brahma devā Vāstoshpatiṃ vratapāṃ nirataxan | "The thoughtful gods have generated prayer: they have fashioned Vastoshpati the protector of sacred rites."

(Who, however, are the "gods" here intended? The word deva is sometimes understood by Sāyana to denote the worshippers; and it may mean no more in these two passages. See Sāyana on R. V. iii. 34, 7, where he makes devebhyaḥ-devana-śīlebhyaḥ stotribhyaḥ.)

In the latter of the two following verses, Vāch (speech) is said to be divine, and to have been generated by the gods. Though Speech is here spoken of generally, and nothing is said of the hymns, still these seem to have come to be connected with her in the minds of the Vedic bards, and to be regarded as her most solemn and important expression.

R. V. viii. 89, 10.—Yad vāg vadantī avichetanāni rāshtrī devānām nishasāda mandrā | chatastra ūrjām duduhe payāmsi kva svid asyāḥ paramam jagāma | 11. Devīm vācham ajanya- yanta devās tāṃ viśvarūpāḥ paśavo vadanti | sā no mandrā ishām ūrjām duhānā dhenur vāg asmān upa susṣṭutā ā etu | “When Vāch, speaking unintelligible things, queen of the gods, sat down, conferring delight, the four regions milked forth sustenance and waters: whither has her highest station departed? The gods generated the divine Vāch; animals of all kinds utter her: may this cow Vāch which brings us joy, and yields us nourishment and sustenance,—approach us, when we celebrate her praises.”

The last verse (as well as R. V. viii. 90, 16, which will be quoted below), derives some illustration from the following passage of the Brihad Āranyaka Upanishad, p. 982 (p. 251 English trans.), in which also Vāch is designated as a cow:—Vācham dhenum upāsita | tasyāś chatvārah stanāḥ svāhā-kāro vashaṭ- kāro hanta-kārah svadhā-kārah | tasyā dvau stanau devā upajī- vanti svāhā-kārañcha vashaṭ-kārañcha hanta-kāram maṇuṣhyāḥ svadhā-kāram pitarah | tasyāḥ prāṇa ṛishabho mano vatsah | “Let a man worship the cow Vāch. She has four udders, the formulæ svāhā, vashaṭ, hanta, and svadhā. The gods live upon her two udders, svāhā and vashaṭ; men upon hanta; and the patriarchs upon svadhā. Breath is her bull; the mind, her calf.”

(The two verses, R. V. viii. 89, 10 and 11, occur in the Nirukta, xi. 28, 29. Roth (in his Illustrations), p. 152, says the unintelligible utterance of Vāch in verse 10, means thunder. Though this be the case, the word appears to have a more general signification in the next verse, and to refer to speech in general, personified as a divine being. The speech which all the animals utter cannot of course be thunder.

In some of the preceding verses of this hymn there is a curious reference made to some sceptical doubts regarding the existence of Indra; which I quote here, though unconnected with the present subject. R. V. viii. 89, 3, 4.—Pra su stomam bharata vājayantam Indrāya satyaṁ yadi satyam asti | na Indro asti iti nema u tva āha ka ṁ dadarśa kam abhi stavāma | Ayam asmi jaritaḥ paśya mā iha viśvā jātāni abhi asmi mahnā | ṛitasya mā pradiśo varddhayanti ādarādiro bhuvanā dardarīmi | “Present to Indra a hymn soliciting food, a true [hymn] if he truly exists. ‘Indra does not exist,’ says some one: ‘who has seen him? whom shall we praise?’ ‘I am here, worshipper’ [answers Indra]; ‘behold me, I surpass all creatures in greatness; the different points of the sacrifice augment me; crushing, I destroy the worlds.’”

Second: the next set of passages which I shall bring forward either refer to Sarasvatī, Vāch, Dhishanā, etc. (various names of the goddess of speech, or different personifications of speech, or of prayer), or at least speak of prayer as divine.

R. V. i. 3, 11, 12.—Chodayitrī sūṁṛitānāṁ chetantī sumatī-nām | yajñaṁ dadhe Sarasvatī | . . . dhūyo viśvā virājati | “Sarasvatī, who furthers the truthful [or our hymns], and who stimulates the wise [or our prayers], has sustained our sacrifice. . . . She enlightens all intellects.”

R. V. i. 22, 10.—Ā gnāḥ Agne iha avase Hotrāṁ yavishṭha Bhāratim | Varūtrīm Dhishanām vaha | “Bring here, youthful Agni, to our help, the wives [of the gods], Hotrā, Bhāratī, Varūtrī, and Dhishanā.”

(Varūtrī, “the eligible,” may be merely an epithet of Dhishanā which, according to Sāyana = vāg-devī, “the goddess of speech.”

R. V. i. 31, 11.—Ilām akṛinvan manushasya śāsanīm ityādi | “The gods made Ilā to be the instructress of men.” (See Professor Wilson's note on this passage, p. 82 of his translation of the R. V. vol i.)

R. V. i. 109, 1.— . . . Na anyā yuvat pramatir asti mahyaṁ sa vāṁ dhiyaṁ vājayantīm ataxam | 2. . . . Athā somasya prayatī ywabhyām Indrāgnī stomaṁ janayāmi navyam | 4. Yuvābhyāṁ devī dhishaṇā madāya Indrāgnī somam uśatī sunoti | 1. "I have no other wisdom than [that which proceeds] from you (Indra and Agni), I who have fabricated for you a hymn supplicating food. 2. . . . I then, together with a libation of soma, generate for you, Indra and Agni, a new hymn. 4. The divine hymn [or rite], longing, pours forth the soma for your exhilaration."

(The wisdom to which the rishi refers at the beginning of this passage does not, however, necessarily, mean the power of composing hymns. In other clauses, this text contains the same words expressive of the fabrication and generation of the hymns by the rishi, which we have already met with in section 3, pp. 130-136).

R. V. ii. 3, 8.—Sarasvatī sādhayantī dhiyaṁ naḥ Ilā devī Bhārati viśvatūrttikḥ | Tisro devīḥ svadhayā barhīr edam achhīdram pāntū śaraṇaṁ niśadya | "May Sarasvatī, perfecting our hymn [or rite], may the divine Ilā, and the all-pervading Bhārati; may these three goddesses, seated on the place of sacrifice, prosper this faultless sacrifice with the oblation."

R. V. iii. 18, 3.— . . . Yāvad īśe brahmanā vandamānaḥ imāṁ dhīyaṁ śata-seyāya devīm | "Worshipping thee with a prayer according to the best of my power, [I offer?] this divine prayer to obtain unbounded wealth."

R. V. iii. 32, 14.—Vivesha yad mā dhishaṇā jajāna ityādi | "When the thought [or voice] entered into me, I gave it birth," etc. (If dhishaṇā here mean "thought," it need not refer to anything supernatural.)

R. V. iv. 34, 1.—Idā hi vo dhishaṇā devī ahnām adhāt pītim ityādi | "For on these days the divine voice has ordained that you should drink soma," etc.

R. V. iv. 43, 1, 2.—Ka u śravat katamo yajñiyānām vandāru devaḥ katamo jushāte | kasya imām devīm amṛiteshu preshthām hṛidi śreshyāma sushtutīm suhavyām | “Who will hear us? which of all the objects of adoration? which of all the gods will receive our praises? In the heart of whom among the immortals can we infix this our divine and dearest hymn, accompanied by excellent oblations?”

R. V. vii. 34, 1.—Pra śukrā etu devī manīshā asmat sutashṭo ratho na vājī | “May prayer, brilliant and divine, proceed from us, like a well-fabricated chariot drawn by steeds.”

R. V. vii. 34, 9.—Abhi vo devīm dhiyaṃ dadidhvam pra vo devatrā vācham kṛinudhvam | “Receive towards you the divine hymn; proclaim the song for yourselves among the gods.”

R. V. vii. 90, 3.—. . . Rāye devī dhishanā dhāti devam | “The divine voice disposes [?] the god to bestow [?] wealth.” (This verse is translated by Professor Benfey in his Glossary to the Sāma-veda under the root vid, p. 170.)

R. V. vii. 96, 3.—Bhadram id bhadrā kṛiṇavat Sarasvatī akavārī chetati vājīnīvatī | grīnānā Jamadagnivat stuvānā cha Vasishthavat | “May the gracious Sarasvati bless us. The generous [goddess] rich in oblations, stimulates us, when praised after the manner of Jamadagni or lauded after the fashion of Vasishtha.”

R. V. viii. 90, 16.—Vachovidaṃ vācham udīrayantīm viśvābhir dhībhir upatishthamānām | devīm devebhyah pari eyushīm gām ā mā avṛikta marttyo dabhrachetāḥ | “Let not any mortal of little intelligence do violence to the cow, the divine Vāch, who is skilled in praise, who utters her voice aloud, who associates with all the gods, and arrives with all the hymns.”

R. V. ix. 33, 5.—Abhi brahmīr anūshata yakhīr ṛitasya mātaro marmṛīyante divaḥ śīśum | “The great devotional [?] mothers of the sacrifice have uttered praise: they decorate the child of the sky.”

R. V. x. 71, 1 ff.—Bṛihaspate prathamam vācho agram yat prairata nāmadheyam dadhānāḥ | yad eshām śreshṭham yad aripram āsīt prenā tad eshām nihitam guhā āviḥ | 2. Saktum iva titāunā punanto yatra dhīrā manasā vācham akrata | atrā sakhāyaḥ sakhyāni jānate bhadrā eshām laxmīr nihitā adhi vāchi | 3. Uta tvaḥ paśyan na dadarśa vācham uta tvaḥ śṛiṇvan na śṛiṇoti enām | uto tvasmai tanvaṁ visasre jāyeva patye usatī suvāsāḥ | 5. Uta tvaṁ sakhye sthira-pitam āhur nainam hinwanty api vājīneshu | adhenvā charati māyayā esha vācham śuśrūwān aphaḷam apushpām | 6. Yas tityāja sachividaṁ sakhāyam na tasya vāchi api bhāgo asti | yad īm śṛiṇoti alakam śṛiṇoti na hi praveda sukrītasya panthām |

1. "O Brihaspati, that first and principal name of speech (Vāch), that which possessing, they uttered aloud [?], that which was to them the most excellent and spotless, that which they had kept secret has, through love, [been made] manifest. 2. Wherever the wise,—cleansing, as it were, meal with a sieve,—have uttered speech with intelligence, their friends recognize [their] friendliness; an auspicious fortune [or sign] is impressed upon their speech. 3. Through sacrifice they followed the track of Vāch, and found her entered into the rishis: bearing her, they divided her into many portions: her the seven poets celebrate. 4. One man, seeing, sees not Vāch; hearing, he hears her not; to another she reveals her form, as an elegantly attired and loving wife displays her person to her husband. 5. They say that one man has a sure defence in [her] friendship; men cannot injure him even in battle; but that man consorts with an unprofitable delusion who has [only] heard speech [Vāch] which is [to him] without fruit or flower. 6. He who has abandoned his discerning friend, has no portion in Vāch; whatever he hears he hears in vain; he knows not the path of virtue."

(The second, fourth, and fifth verses of this obscure hymn are quoted in the Nirūkta, iv. 10; i. 19, and 20; and are explained in Professor Roth's Illustrations. Verses 2 and 4 are also quoted and interpreted in the Mahābhāshya; see pp. 30 and 31 of Dr. Ballantyne's edition. The verse which is of most importance for my present purpose, is, however, the third, which speaks of Vāch having entered into the rishis. The idea of Vāch being divided into many portions will be found again below in R. V. x. 125, 3.)

R. V. x. 96, 10.— . . . Mahī chid hi dhishanā aharyad ityādi | “The great voice [or hymn] has desired thee.”

R. V. x. 110, 8 (= Vāj. S. 29, 33).—Ā no yajñam Bhārati tūyam etu Ilā manushvad iha chetayanti | tisro devīr barkir ā idam syonam Sarasvatī svapasah sadantu | “Let Bhārati come quickly here to our sacrifice, with Ilā, who instructs us like Manu [or like a man], and with Sarasvati: let these three goddesses, skilful in rites, sit down upon this beautiful sacrificial grass.”

R. V. x. 125, 3.—Aham rāshṭrī saṅgamanī vasūnām chikitushī prathamā yajñīyānām | tām mā devā vyadadhuh purutrā bhūristhātrām bhūri aveśayanti | 4. Mayā so annam atti yo vipāśyati yah prāṇiti ya im śṛiṇoti uktam | amantavo mām te upaxiyanti śrudhi śruta śraddhivam te vadāmi | 5. Aham eva svayam idaṁ vadāmi jushṭam devebhir uta mānusebhikḥ | yaṁ kāmaye taṁ tam ugraṁ kṛiṇomi tam brahmānaṁ tam rishiṁ taṁ sumedhām | 3. “I am the queen, the centre of riches, intelligent, the first of the objects of adoration: the gods have separated me into many portions, have assigned me many abodes, and made me widely pervading. 4. He who has insight, who lives, who hears [my] sayings, eats through me [the sacred] food. Those men who are foolish destroy me, [or, those who disregard me, perish]. Listen, thou who art learned, I declare to thee what is worthy of belief. 5. I myself make known this which is agreeable both to gods and men. Him whom I love I make terrible, [I make] him a priest, [I make] him a rishi, [I make] him intelligent.” (This passage occurs also in the Atharva-veda, iv. 30, 2 ff., but with some various readings, as āveśayantaḥ for āveśayantīm, and śraddheyam for śraddhivam, etc. The hymn is translated by Mr. Colebrooke, Ess. i. 32, or p. 16 of W. and N.'s ed.)

R. V. x. 176, 2.—Pra devaṁ devyā dhīyā bharata Jātavedasam havyā no vaxad ānushak | “By divine prayer produce Jātavedas: may he present our oblations in order.”

R. V. x. 177, 1.—Patāṅgam ahtam asurasya māyayā hṛidā paśyanti manasā vipaśchitaḥ | samudre antaḥ kavayo vichaxate marīchīnām padam ichhanti vedhasaḥ | 2. Patāṅgo vācham manasā bibhartti tāṁ Gandharvo avadad garbhe antaḥ | tāṁ dyotamānāṁ svaryam manīshām ṛitasya pade kavayo nipānti | “Sages behold with the heart and mind the Bird enveloped by the wisdom of the Asura: the wise perceive him in the sky: the prudent seek after the abode of his rays. 2. The Bird cherishes speech with his mind: the Gandharva hath uttered her in the womb: the bards preserve in the place of sacred rites this shining and celestial intellect.” (See also R. V. x. 189, 3, vāk patāṅgāya dhīyate.)

Third: I shall now adduce the passages in which other Vedic deities, whether singly or in concert, are spoken of as concerned in the production of the hymns.

Aditi.—In R. V. viii. 12, 14, Aditi is mentioned as fulfilling this function: Yad uta svarāje Aditiḥ stomam Indrāya jñanat puru-praśastam ūtaye ityādi | “When Aditi generated for the self-resplendent Indra a hymn abounding in praises, to supplicate succour,” etc.

Agni.—R. V. i. 18, 6, 7.—Sadasaspatim abhutam priyam Indrasya kāmyam | sanim medhām ayāsisham | yasmād ṛite na siddhyati yajño vipaśchitaś chana | sa dhīnām yogam invati | 6. “I have resorted, for wisdom, to Sadasaspati (Agni), the wonderful, the dear, the beloved of Indra, the beneficent; (7) without whom the sacrifice of the wise does not succeed: he promotes the course of our ceremonies.”

R. V. iv. 5, 3.—Sāma dvībarhā mahi tigma-bhṛishṭiḥ sahasra-retā vṛishabhas tuviśmān | padaṁ na gor apagūlham rividvān

Agnir mahyaṁ pra id u vachad manīshām | 6. Idam me Agne kīyate pāvaka aminate gurum bhāraṁ na manma | Vṛihad dadhātha dhrīshatā gabhīraṁ yakvam priṣṭham prayasā sapta-dhātu | “Agni occupying two positions, the fierce-flaming, the prolific, the showerer of benefits, the opulent, who knows the sacred hymn, mysterious as the track of a [missing cow], has declared to me the knowledge [of it]. 6. To me who am feeble, though innoxious, thou, o Agni, purifier, hast given, as a heavy load, this great, profound, and extensive hymn, of seven elements, with efficacious oblations.” (I find a difficulty, even with the help of Sāyana’s Commentary, in translating the remaining word of this verse, priṣṭham. See Part Second, p. 489.)

R. V. iv. 6, 1.—Tvaṁ hi viśvam abhi asi manma pra vedhasāś chit tirasi manīshām | “Thou presidest over all thoughts [or prayers]; thou promotest the praises of the sage.”

R. V. iv. 11, 3.—Tvad Agne kāvyā tvad manīshās tvad ukthā jāyante rādhyāni | “From thee, Agni, proceed poetic thoughts; from thee the products of the mind; from thee effective hymns.”

R. V. x. 21, 5.—Agnir jāto Atharvaṇā vidad viśvāni kāvyā | “Agni, generated by Atharvan, is acquainted with all wisdom.”

R. V. x. 91, 8.—. . . Medhākāraṁ vidathasya prasādhanam Agnim ityādi | “Agni, the giver of understanding, the accomplisher of sacrifice.”

R. V. x. 4, 5.—Yad vo vayam pramināmo vratāni vidushām devā avidustarāsaḥ | Agnis tad viśvam āpriṇāti vidvān yebhir devān ṛitubhikḥ kalpayāti | Yat pākatrā manasā dānadaxā na yajñasya manvate martyāsaḥ | Agnis tad hotā kratuvid vijānan yajishṭho devān rituśo yajāti | “When, o [ye] gods, we, the most unwise among the wise, undertake sacred rites in your honour, the wise Agni completes them all, at the stated seasons which he assigns to the gods. When men, devoted to sacrifice, do not, from their ignorance, rightly comprehend the mode of worship, Agni, the skilful sacrificer, and most eminent of priests, knowing the ceremonial, worships the gods at the proper seasons.”

early Indians, and are often expressed by the same words; if Agni was supposed to be the director of the one, viz., the oblations, he might easily come to be also regarded as aiding in the production of the other—the hymns. Verse 4, occurs also in the A. V. xix. 59, 1, 2, where, however, āprīnātu is read instead of āprīnāti, and in place of the words yebhir devān, etc., at the close of the verse, we have, somāscha yo brāhmanān ā viveśa | “and Soma, who entered into the priests.”

Brahmanaspati.—R. V. i. 40, 5, 6.—Pra nūnam Brahmanaspatir mantram vadati ukthyam | yasminn Indro Varuno Mitraḥ Aryamā devā okāṃsi chakrīre | Tam id vochema vidatheshu sambhavam mantram devā anehasam ityādi | “Brahmanaspati (abiding in the worshipper’s mouth, according to the scholiast) utters the hymn accompanied with praise, in which the gods, Indra, Varuna, Mitra, and Aryaman, have made their abode. Let us utter, gods, at sacrifices, that spotless hymn, conferring felicity.” (Roth in his Lexicon considers okas to mean “good pleasure,” “satisfaction.” See also his Essay on Brahma and the Brahmans, Jour. of the Germ. Or. Soc. i. 74.)

Bṛihaspati.—R. V. ii. 23, 2.—Usrāḥ iva sūryo jyotishā maho viśveshām ij janitā brahmanām asi | “As the glorious sun by his lustre generates rays, so art thou (Bṛihaspati) the generator of all prayers.”

Gandharva.—According to Professor Roth (see under the word in his Lexicon), the Gandharva is represented in the Veda as a deity who knows and reveals the secrets of heaven, and divine truths in general; in proof of which he quotes the following texts:—

R. V. x. 139, 5.—Viśvāvasur abhi tad no grīnātu divyo Gandharvo rajaso vimānaḥ | Yad vā ghā satyam uta yad na vidma dhīyo hinwāno dhīyaḥ id naḥ avyāḥ | “May the celestial Gandharva Viśvāvasu, who is the measurer of the atmosphere, declare to us that which is true, or which we know not. May he receive and delight in our hymns, [or, stimulating our interests, may he prosper our hymns].”

A. V. ii. 1, 2.—Pra tad voched amṛitasya vidvān Gandharvo dhāma paramaṁ guhā yat | “May the Gandharva, who knows the world of the immortals, declare to us that supreme and mysterious abode.”

Indra.—R. V. iii. 54, 17.—Mahat tad vaḥ kavayaś chāru nāma yad ha devā bhavatha viśve Indre | sakhā Ribhubhikḥ puru hūta priyebhir imāṁ dhīyaṁ sātaye taxatā naḥ | “Great, o sage [Aśvins], is that cherished name of yours, through which [or, that] ye all become gods with (in) Indra. Do thou, much invoked (Indra), our friend, with the beloved Ribhus, fabricate (or dispose) this hymn for our welfare.” (This may merely mean that Indra was asked to give a favourable issue to the prayer of the worshipper, not to compose his hymn for him. See Roth’s Lexicon, under the word tax, 3.)

R. V. vi. 26, 3.—Tvaṁ kaviṁ chodayaḥ arkasātāv ityādi | “Thou (Indra) didst stimulate the poet in the composition of his hymns,” etc. (Sāyana renders arkasātau, “for the sake of finding food.”)

R. V. vi. 18, 15.—Kṛishvā kṛitno akṛitaṁ yat te asti ukthaṁ navīyo janayasva yajñaiḥ | “Energetic (Indra), do what thou hast never yet done; generate a new song with the sacrifices.”

R. V. vi. 34, 1.—Sam cha tve jagmur girāḥ Indra pūrūr vi cha tvad yanti vibhvo manīshāḥ | “Many hymns are congregated in thee, o Indra, and numerous products of the mind issue from thee.” (This verse has been already quoted in p. 124.)

R. V. vi. 47, 10.—Indra mṛiḷa mahyaṁ jīvātum iccha chodāya dhīyam ayaso na dhārām | Yat kiñcha ahaṁ tvāyur idaṁ vadāmi taj jushasva kṛidhi mā devavantam | “O Indra, gladden me, decree life for me, sharpen my intellect like the edge of an iron instrument. Whatever I, longing for thee, now utter, do thou accept; give me divine protection.” (Compare with the word chodaya the use of the word prachodayāt in the Gāyatri, R. V. iii. 62, 10, which will be given below.)

R. V. vii. 97, 3.—Tam u namasā havirbhikḥ suśevam Brahmanaspatiṁ grīṇīshe | Indraṁ śloko mahi daivyaḥ sishaktu yo

brahmano devakritasya rājā | 5. Tam ā no arkam amṛitāya jush-tam ime dhāsura amṛitāsah purājāḥ ityādi | “3. I invoke with reverence and with offerings the beneficent Brahmanaspati. Let a great and divine song celebrate Indra, who is king of the prayer made by the devas. 5. May these ancient immortals make this our hymn acceptable to the immortal,” etc. (Are we to understand the word deva here of gods or priests?)

R. V. viii. 13, 7.—Pratnavaj janaya giraḥ sṛinudhi jaritur havam | “As of old, generate hymns; hear the invocation-of thy worshipper.”

R. V. x. 112, 9.—Ni shu sīda gaṇapate gaṇeshu tvām āhur vipratamaṁ havīnām | na rīte tvat kriyate kiñchana āre mahām arkam Maghavan chitram archa | “Lord of assemblies, sit amid our multitudes; they call thee the wisest of poets. Nothing is done without, or apart from thee; Maghavan, receive with favour our great and beautiful hymn.” (Already quoted in p. 148.)

Indra and Vishnu.—R. V. vi. 69, 2.—Yā visvāsāṁ janitārā matīnām Indrā-Vishnū kalāsā soma-dhānā | Pra vām giraḥ śasyamānāḥ avantu pra stomāso gīyamānāsah arkaiḥ | “Indra and Vishnu, ye who are the generators of all hymns, who are the vessels into which soma is poured, may the praises which are now recited gratify you, and the songs which are chaunted with encomiums.”

Indra and Varuna.—The following passage is not, properly speaking, a portion of the Rig-veda, as it is part of one of the Vāḷakhilyas or apocryphal additions (described in Part Second, p. 210), which are found inserted between the 48th and 49th hymns of the 8th Mandala. From its style, however, it appears to be nearly as old as some parts of the R. V.

Indravarunā yad ṛishibhyo manīshāṁ vācho matīm śrutam adattam agre | yāni sthānāny asṛijanta dhīrā yajñam tanvānās tapasā bhīyapaśyam | “Indra and Varuna, I have seen through devotion that which ye formerly gave to the rishis, wisdom, understanding of speech, sacred lore, and all the places which the sages created, when performing sacrifice.” (See Part Second, p. 220.)

Pūshan.—R. V. x. 26, 4.—Maṁsīmahi tvā vayam asmākaṁ deva Pūshan matināñcha sādhanam viprānāñcha ādhavam | “We adore thee, divine Pushan, the accomplisher of our hymns, and the stimulator of sages.”

Savitṛi.—R. V. iii. 62 (= S. V. ii. 812, and Vāj. S. iii. 35).—Tat Savitur varenyam bhargo devasya dhīmahi | dhiyo yo naḥ prachodayāt | “We meditate that excellent glory of the divine Savitṛi; may he stimulate our understandings [or hymns, or rites].”

(This is the celebrated Gāyatrī, the most sacred of all the texts in the Veda. See Colebrooke’s Misc. Ess. i. pp. 29, 30, 127, and 175; or pp. 14, 15, 78, and 109 of W. and N.’s ed. Benfey (S. V. p. 277) translates the Gāyatrī thus: “May we receive the glorious brightness of this, the generator, of the god who shall prosper our works.”

The Linga Purana (Part II. sec. 48, 5 ff., Bombay lithographed ed.) gives the following “varieties” of the Gāyatrī, adapted to modern Śaiva worship: Gāyatrī-bhedāḥ || Tatpuru- shāya vidmahe vāg-vīsuddhāya dhīmahi | Tan naḥ Śivaḥ prachod- dayāt || Ganāmbikāyai vidmahe karmasiddhyai cha dhīmahi | Tan no Gaurī prachodayāt || Tatpurushāya vidmahe Mahāde- vāya dhīmahi | Tan no Rudraḥ prachodayāt || Tatpurushāya vidmahe Vaktratundāya dhīmahi | Tan no Dantiḥ prachodayāt || Mahāsenāya vidmahe vāg-vīsuddhāya dhīmahi | Tan naḥ Skan- daḥ prachodayāt || Tiṛnaśṛṅgāya vidmahe Vedapādāya dhī- mahi | Tan no Vṛishah prachodayād ityādi | “(1) We contem- plate That Purusha, we meditate him who is pure in word [or purified by the word]; may That Śiva stimulate us. (2) We contemplate Ganāmbikā, and we meditate Karmasiddhi (the accomplishment of works); may That Gaurī stimulate us. (3) We contemplate That Purusha, and we meditate Mahādeva; may That Rudra stimulate us. (4) We contemplate That Purusha, and we meditate Vaktratunda (Ganeśa); may That Danti (the elephant) stimulate us. (5) We contemplate Mahāsenā (Kārti- keya), and we meditate him who is pure in word; may That Skanda stimulate us. (6) We contemplate Tīkṣasringa (the sharp-horned), and we meditate the Veda-footed; may Vrisha (the bull) stimulate us."

Soma.—R. V. vi. 47, 3.—Ayam me pītaḥ udiyartti vācham ayam manīshām usatīm ajḡgaḥ | "This [soma], when drunk, stimulates my speech [or hymn]; this called forth the ardent thought."

It may be said that this and the other following texts relating to soma, should not be quoted as proofs that any idea of divine inspiration was entertained by the ancient Indian bards, as they can mean nothing more than that the rishis were sensible of a stimulating effect on their thoughts and powers of expression, produced by the exhilarating draughts of the juice of that plant in which they indulged. But the rishis had come to regard Soma as a god, and apparently to be passionately devoted to his worship. See Part Second, pp. 470 ff., and especially pp. 474, 475.

A. V. viii. 48, 3.—Apāma somam amṛitā abhūma aganma jyotir avidāma devān | kiṁ nūnam asmān kṛiṇavad arātīḥ kim u dhūrttir amṛita martyasya | "We have drunk the soma, we have become immortal, we have entered into light, we have known the gods; what can an enemy now do to us? what can the malice of any mortal effect, o immortal god?"

(This passage is quoted in the commentary of Gauḍapāda on the Sāṅkhya Kārikā, verse 2, and is translated (incorrectly as regards the last clause), by Prof. Wilson, in p. 13 of his English version.)

A curious parallel to this last Vedic text is to be found in the satirical drama of Euripides, the Cyclops, 578 ff.; though here, of course, the object is merely to depict the drunken elevation of the monster Polyphemus:

Ὅ δ' οὐρανός μοι συμμεμυγμένος δοκεῖ
 Τῆ γῆ φέρεσθαι, τοῦ Διὸς τε τὸν θρόνον Δεύσσω τὸ πᾶν τε δαιμόνων ἄγνυν σέβας.

"The sky, commingled with the earth, appears To whirl around; I see the throne of Jove,
 And all the awful glory of the gods."

R. V. ix. 25, 5.—Arusho janayan girah somah pavate āyushag Indraṁ gachchan kavikratuḥ | “The ruddy Soma, sage, united with men, purifies us, generating hymns, resorting to Indra.”

R. V. ix. 76, 4.—. . . Pitā matīnām asamashṭa-kāvyaḥ | “[Soma] father of our hymns, of incomparable wisdom.”

R. V. ix. 95, 2.—Harīḥ sṛjānaḥ pathyām ṛitasya iyartti vācham ariteva nāvam | devo devānām guhyāni nāma āvishkṛiṇoti barhishi pravāche | “The golden [Soma] when poured out, sends forth the hymn, [or, his voice], the companion of the ceremony, as a rower propels a boat. A god, he reveals the mysterious names of the gods to the bard upon the sacred grass.” (See R. V. ii. 42, 1, and x. 116, 9, quoted in p. 137).

R. V. ix. 96, 5 (= S. V. ii. 293-5).—Somaḥ pavate janitā matīnām janitā divo janitā pṛithivyā janitā Agner janitā sūryasya janitā Indrasya janitā uta Vishṇoḥ | 6. Brahmā devānām padavīḥ kavīnām ṛishīḥ viprānām mahiṣo mṛigānām śyeno gṛidhrānām svadhītīḥ vanānām somah pavitram atī eti rebhan | 7. Prāvīpād vāchaḥ ūrmiṁ na sindhur girah somah pavamāno manīshāḥ ityādi | “Soma purifies us, he who is the generator of hymns, of the sky, of the earth, of fire, of the sun, of Indra, and of Vishnu. 6. Soma, who is Brahmā among the gods, a leader among the poets, a rishi among sages, a buffalo among wild beasts, a falcon among vultures, an axe amid the forests, advances to the filter with a sound. The purifying soma, like the sea rolling its waves, has poured forth songs, hymns, and thoughts,” etc. (See Benfey’s translation of this passage in his Sāma-veda, pp. 238 and 253.)

Varuna.—R. V. viii. 41, 5, 6.—Yo dharttā bhuvanānām ya usrāṇām apīchyā veda nāmāni guhyā | sa kavīḥ kāvyā puru rūpam dyaur iva pushyati . . . | Yasmin viśvāni kāvyā chakre nābhīḥ iva śritā ityādi | “He who is the upholder of the worlds (Varuna), who knows the secret and mysterious names of the cows, he, a sage [or poet], cherishes sage [or poetical] works, as the sky does many forms. . . . In him all sage [or poetical] works abide, as the nave within a wheel," etc. (See R. V. vii. 87, 4, in p. 144, and ix. 95, 2, above, p. 163.)

Varuna, Mitra, and Aryaman.—R. V. vii. 66, 11.—Vi ye dadhuḥ śaradam māsam ād ahar yajñam aktuṁ cha ād ṛicham anāpyam Varuṇo Mitraḥ Aryamā xatraṁ rājānaḥ āśata | “The kings, Varuna, Mitra, and Aryaman, who made the autumn, the month, the day, the sacrifice, night, and the Rik, possess an invincible power.”

The following passage of the Rig-veda has (as we have seen above, p. 51, note 37; and p. 58), been quoted by Indian commentators and aphorists to prove the eternity of the Veda, on its own authority :

R. V. viii. 64, 6.—Tasmai nānam abhidyave vāchā Virūpa nityayā vṛishne chodasva susṭutim | “Send forth praises, Virūpa, to this heaven-aspiring and prolific Agni, with perpetual voice.”

There is, however, no reason whatever to suppose that the words nityayā vāchā mean anything more than perpetual voice. There is no ground for imagining that the rishi entertained any such conception as became current among the systematic theologians of later times, that his words were eternal. The word nitya is used in the same sense “perpetual” in R. V. ix. 12, 7 (= S. V. ii. 55, 2), where it is said of Soma, nityastotro vanaspatir dhīnām antar ityādi | “The monarch of the woods, continually-praised, among the hymns,” etc., as well as in the two following texts :

R. V. ix. 92, 3.—Somaḥ punānaḥ sadaḥ eti nityam ityādi | “The pure Soma comes to his perpetual abode [or to his abode continually],” etc.

R. V. x. 39, 14 (quoted above, p. 132).—Nityāṁ na sūnuṁ tanayāṁ dadhānāḥ | “Continuing the series like an unbroken line of descendants.”

The tenor of the numerous texts adduced in this Section seems clearly to establish the fact that some at least of the ancient Indian rishis conceived themselves to be prompted and directed, in the composition of their hymns and prayers, by supernatural aid, derived from various deities of their pantheon. It may add force to the proof derived from these texts, and show that I am the less likely to have misunderstood their purport and spirit, if I adduce some evidence that a similar conception was not unknown in another region of the ancient Indo-Germanic world, and that the expressions in which the early Grecian bards laid claim to an inspiration descending from the Muses, or from Apollo, were not mere figures of speech, but significant, originally, of a living belief. Most of the following passages, from Hesiod and Homer, in which this idea is enunciated, are referred to in Mr. Grote's History of Greece, i. 478.

Hesiod, Theogonia, 22 :—

Ἄϊ νύ ποθ' Ἡσίοδον καλὴν ἐδίδαξαν αἰοιδὴν Ἄρνας ποιμαίνονθ' Ἑλικῶνος ὑπο ζαθέοιο.
 Τόνδε δέ με πρῶτιστα θεαὶ πρὸς μῦθον ἔειπαν, Μοῦσαι Ὀλυμπιάδες, κοῦραι Διὸς ἀγιόχοιο.
 Ποιμένεσ ἕγραυλοι, κάκ' ἐλέγχεα, γαστέρες Διον, ἴδμεν ψεύδεα πολλὰ λέγειν ἐτύμοισιν ὁμοῖα, ἴδμεν δ', ἔντ' ἐθέλωμεν, ἀληθέα μυθήσασθαι.
 Ὡς ἔφασαν κοῦραι μεγάλου Διὸς ἀρτιέπειαι·
 Καί μοι σκῆπτρον ἔδον, δάφνης ἐριθηλέος ὄζον, Δρέψασαι θηητόν· ἐνέπνευσαν δέ μοι αὐδὴν
 Θείην, ὡς κλείομι τὰ τ' ἐσσόμενα, πρό τ' ἐόντα, Καί με κέλονθ' ὑμεῖν μακάρων γένος αἰὲν ἐόντων,
 Σφᾶσ τ' αὐτὰς πρῶτόν τε καὶ ὕστερον αἰὲν αἰεῖδεν.

“Hesiod erst was instructed in beautiful song by the Muses, Once as he tended his lambs under glorious Helicon's summit. Me then the goddesses first, the Olympian Muses, accosted : This was the word which those daughters of Jupiter spake in my hearing : ‘Ye who abide in the fields, ye contemptible, gluttonous shepherds, Full many tales we can tell which are feigned, though they seem to be real; But we are skilled, when we please, to relate the reality also.’ Thus, very fluent in speech, mighty Jupiter's daughters addressed me. Straightway then plucking a branch of luxuriant laurel, the Muses Gave it to me for a staff, and inspired me with speech superhuman, Fitting me thus to make known both the future and also the bygone. Next they enjoined me to hymn the immortals, unchangeably blessed, Chiefly, however, to sing their own praises, beginning and ending.”

Ἐκ γὰρ Μουσῶν καὶ ἐκηθόλου Ἀπόλλωνος
Ἄνδρες ἀοῖδοι ἕασιν ἐπὶ χθόνα καὶ κιθαρισταί, Ἐκ δὲ Διὸς βασιλῆες.

“Minstrels who come to this earth, as well as all tuneful musicians, Spring from the heavenly Muses, and from the far-darting Apollo :
Kings are from Jupiter sprung.”

The following are the words in which the author of the Iliad invokes the aid of the Muses, to qualify him for enumerating the generals of the Grecian host (Iliad, ii. 484) :—

Ἔσπετε νῦν μοι Μοῦσαι Ολύμπια δωμάτων ἔχουσαι, Ἵμεῖς γὰρ θεαὶ ἐστε πάρεστε τε ἴστε τε πάντα,
Ἵμεῖς δὲ κλέος Διον ἀκούομεν ὀυδέ τι ἴδμεν.

“Tell to me now, O ye Muses, who dwell in Olympian mansions, Ye who are goddesses, present, and knowing all things which befall men, Things of which we may hear rumours, but never get accurate knowledge—Tell to me who were commanders and chiefs of the Grecian army.”

But the Muses could also take away, as well as impart, the gift of song, as appears from Iliad, ii. 594 ff.

Ἔνθα τε Μοῦσαι
Ἀντόμεναι Θάμυριν τὸν Ὀρθήκα παῦσαν ἀοιδῆς·
Στεῦτο γὰρ εὐχόμενος νικησέμεν, ἔϊπερ ἂν αὐταὶ
Μοῦσαι ἀείδοιεν, κοῦραι Διὸς ἀγριόχοιο.
Ἄι δὲ χολωσάμεναι πηρὸν θέσαν, αὐτὰρ ἀοιδὴν
Θεσπεσίην ἀφέλοντο, καὶ ἐκκλέαθον κιθαριστῶν.

“That was the spot where the Muses
Thracian Thamyris met, when they stopped his career as a minstrel.
Boastfully he had affirmed that, if even the heavenly Muses, Daughters of Jove, should compete, he would bear off the laurels for singing.

The following passages from the Odyssey refer to Demodocus, the bard who sang at the court of Alcinoüs, King of the Phæacians (Odyssey, viii. 43 ff.) :—

Δημόδοκον· τῷ γὰρ ῥα θεὸς πέρι δῶκεν ἀοιδήν,
Τέρπειν, ὅππῃ θυμὸς ἐποτρύνησιν ἀείδειν.

Minstrel divine, whom the god hath endowed with most exquisite science, Charming, whenever his spirit impels him to sing for our pleasure.”

Κῆρυξ δ' ἐγγύθεν ἦλθεν ἔργων ἐρήθρον αἰδὸν
 Τὸν πέρι Μοῦσ' ἐφίλησε, δίδου δ' ἀγαθὸν τε κακὸν τε, Ὀφθαλμῶν μὲν ἔμερσε δίδου δ' ἠδεῖαν αἰοῖδῆν.

“Afterward nigh came the herald, conducting the loveable minstrel.
 Eyesight she took from him, while she assigned him sweet song in requital.”

 Τιμῆς ἔμμοροί εἰσι καὶ αἰδοῦς. θυνεκ' ἔρα σφέας
 Ὀϊμας Μοῦσ' ἐδίδαξε, φίλησε δὲ φύλον αἰοιδῶν.

And again he addresses him thus (Odyssey, viii. 487) :—

 Ἦ σέ γε Μοῦσ' ἐδίδαξε Διὸς πάϊς, ἣ σέ γ' Ἀπόλλων.
 Λίην γὰρ κατὰ κόσμον Ἀχαιῶν διτον αἰεῖεις, κ.τ.λ.

“Happy I deem thee, Demodocus, far above all other mortals.
 Either the Muse, Jove's daughter, hath taught thee, or Phœbus Apollo;
 Such the exactness with which thou relatest the fate of the Argives.”³

Phemius, the Ithacan minstrel, thus supplicates Ulysses to spare his life (Odyssey, xxii. 345 ff.) :—

Ἀντῷ τοι μετόπισθ' ἄχος ἔσσειται, εἶκεν αἰοιδόν
 Πέφνης, ὅς τε θεοῖσι καὶ ἀνθρώποισιν αἰείδω.
 Ἀυτοδίδακτος δ' εἰμι, θεὸς δέ μοι ἐν φρεσὶν ὕμας Παντοίας ἐνέφυσεν.

 Me, who sing praise to the gods, and delight mankind with my legends.
 Self-instructed am I, but a god hath implanted within me
 All kinds of narrative lore.”

³ “That is,” says Mr. Grote, “Demodocus has either been inspired as a poet by the muse, or as a prophet by Apollo, for the Homeric Apollo is not the god of song. Kalchas, the prophet, receives his inspiration from Apollo, who confers upon him the same knowledge, both of past and future, as the Muses give to Hesiod.” But does not this passage itself (Odyssey viii. 488) show that the Homeric Apollo was the god of song, as well as the bestower of prophetic intuition? and do we not learn the same from Iliad, i. 603? In any case, it is quite clear from Theog. 94, quoted above, that Hesiod regarded Apollo in this character.

The early Greeks believed that the gift of prophecy also, as well as that of song, was imparted by the gods to mortals. This appears from the following passage of Homer (Iliad, i. 69) :—

 ὅς ῥ' ἤδη τὰ τ' ἔόντα τὰ τ' ἔσοόμενα, πρό τ' ἔόντα, Καὶ νήεσσ' ἠγήσατ' Ἀχαιῶν Ἴλιον ἔισω, Ἦν διὰ μαντοσύνην, τήν δι πόρε Φοῖβος Ἀπόλλων.

 Skilled in the present, foreseeing the future, and knowing the bygone ;
 Guide of the Grecian gallies from Hellas to Ilion's roadstead,

It is well argued by Mr. Grote that the early Greeks really believed in the inspiration of their bards by the Muses (History of Greece, i. 477 ff.) :—

“ His [the early Greek's] faith is ready, literal and uninquiring, apart from all thought of discriminating fact from fiction, or of detecting hidden and symbolized meaning : it is enough that what he hears be intrinsically plausible and seductive, and that there be no special cause to provoke doubt. And if indeed there were, the poet overrules such doubts by the holy and all-sufficient authority of the Muse, whose omniscience is the warrant for his recital, as her inspiration is the cause of his success. The state of mind, and the relation of speaker to hearers, thus depicted, stand clearly marked in the terms and tenor of the ancient epic, if we only put a plain meaning upon what we read. The poet—like the prophet, whom he so much resembles—sings under heavenly guidance, inspired by the goddess to whom he has prayed for her assisting impulse. She puts the word into his mouth and the incidents into his mind ; he is a privileged man, chosen as her organ, and speaking from her revelations. As the Muse grants the gift of song to whom she will, so she sometimes in her anger snatches it away, and the most consummate human genius is then left silent and helpless. It is true that these expressions, of the Muse inspiring, and the poet singing, a tale of past times, have passed from the ancient epic to compositions produced under very different circumstances, and have now degenerated into unmeaning forms of speech; but they gained currency originally in their genuine and literal acceptance. If poets had from the beginning written or recited, the predicate of singing would never have been ascribed to them; nor would it ever have become customary to employ the name of the Muse as a die to be stamped on licensed fiction, unless the practice had begun when her agency was invoked and hailed in perfect good faith. Belief, the fruit of deliberate inquiry, and a rational scrutiny of evidence, is in such an age unknown; the simple faith of the time slides in unconsciously, when the imagination and feeling are exalted; and inspired authority is at once understood, easily admitted, and implicitly confided in."

If we extend our researches over the pages of Homer, we shall speedily discover numerous other instances of divine interference in human affairs, not merely (1) in the general government of the world, in the distribution of good and evil, and the allotment of the diversified gifts, intellectual, moral, and physical, which constitute the innumerable varieties of human condition, but also (2) in the way of special suggestion, guidance, encouragement, and protection, afforded to individuals.

Illustrations of the general control exercised by the gods over the fortunes of mankind may be found in the following passages of the Iliad, xiii. 730 ff., and of the Odyssey, i. 347 f.; iv. 236 f.; vi. 188 f.; viii. 167-175; xvii. 218, 485 ff.

The following are illustrations of the special interference of the gods in behalf of their favourites:—Iliad, i. 194 ff., 218; iii. 380 ff.; v. 1 ff.; vii. 272; xiii. 60 f., 435; xvi. 788 ff.:—Odyssey, i. 319 ff.; iii. 26 ff.; xiv. 216 f., 227; xvi. 159 ff.⁴ Of the latter class of passages, I quote two specimens.

Ἦ μὲν ἔρ ὡς εἰποῦσ' ἀπέβη γλαυκῶπις Ἀθήνη, Ὀρνις δ' ὡς ἀνοπᾶια διέπτατο· τῶ δ' ἐνὶ θυμῷ
 Ἐῆκε μένος καὶ θάρσος, ὑπέμνησέν τε ἑ πατρός
 Μᾶλλον ἔτ' ἢ τὸ πάροιθεν· ὃ δὲ φρεσὶν ἦσι νοήσας
 Ἐάμβησεν κατὰ θυμόν, δῖσ' αὖτο γὰρ θεὸν εἶναι.

 Flying aloft like a bird, unobserved : but to him she implanted
Courage and strength in his soul, and reminded him then of his father Far more strongly than ever : he then, perceiving the marvel, Wondered exceedingly, thinking a god must have been his adviser.

When Telemachus urges his youth and inexperience as a reason for diffidence in approaching Nestor, Minerva says to him (Odyssey iii. 26) :—

Τηλέμαχ', ἄλλα μὲν αὐτὸς ἐνὶ φρεσὶ σῆσι νοήσεις,
 Ἄλλα δὲ καὶ δαίμων ὑποθήσεται· ὃν γὰρ οἶω
 Ὅου σε θεῶν ἀέκητι γενέσθαι τε τραφέναι τε.

“ Some things thou thyself shalt perceive in thine own understanding ;
 Others, again, some god will suggest to thy spirit, for never Hast thou been born, or bred up, except by celestial permission.”

These passages, however, afford only one exemplification of the idea which runs through, and in fact, created, the entire mythology of the Greeks, viz., that all the departments of life and of nature were animated, controlled, and governed by particular deities, by whom they were represented, and in whom they were personified.

The Indian mythology,—as is evident to every reader of the Vedas, as well as (to some extent) to the student of the Puranas,—is distinguished by the same tendency as the Grecian. Indra, Agni, Vāyu, Varuna, Sūrya, and many other gods are nothing else than personifications of the elements, while Vāch or Sarasvatī and some other deities, represent either the divine reason by which the more gifted men were supposed to be inspired, or some mental function, or ceremonial abstraction.

In the later religious history, however, of the two races, the Hellenic and the Indian, there is in one respect a remarkable divergence. Though the priestesses of the different oracles, and perhaps some other pretenders to prophetic intuition, were popularly regarded as speaking by a divine impulse,⁵ the idea of inspiration as attaching to poems or other compositions of a religious, didactic, or philosophical character, very soon became extinct. The Greeks had no sacred Scriptures. Their philosophers spoke and wrote in dependance on their own reason alone. They never professed to be guided by any supernatural assistance, nor claimed any divine authority for their dogmas. Nor was any such character of infallibility ever claimed for any of them by their successors.

In India, on the other hand, the indistinct, and perhaps hesitating, belief which some of the ancient rishis seem to have entertained in their own inspiration was not suffered to die out in the minds of later generations. On the contrary this belief grew up by degrees into a fixed persuasion that all the literary productions of those early sages had not only resulted from a supernatural impulse, but were infallible, divine, and even eternal. These works have become the sacred Scriptures of India. And in the popular opinion, if not in the estimation of the learned, most Indian works of any importance, of a religious, scientific, or philosophical kind, which were produced at a later period, have come to be regarded as inspired, as soon as the lapse of ages had removed the writers beyond familiar or traditional knowledge, and invested their names with a halo of reverence.

To return from this digression to the inquiry which was being pursued regarding the opinions of the ancient Vedic rishis on the subject of their own inspiration :

How, it will be asked, are we to reconcile this impression which the rishis manifest of being prompted by supernatural aid, with the circumstance, which seems to be no less distinctly proved by the citations made in the preceding section (pp. 128, 136), that they frequently speak of themselves as having made, fabricated, or generated the hymns, without apparently betraying any consciousness that in this process they were inspired or guided by any extraneous assistance?

I am not in a position to attempt any very precise explanation of this discrepancy. I will only suggest (1) that possibly the idea of inspiration may not have been held by the earliest rishis, but may have grown up among their successors; or (2) that it may have been entertained by some rishis, and not by others; or again (3), if both ideas can be traced to the same author (as is possibly the case in R. V. i. 109, 1, 4), we may suppose that the one notion was uppermost in his mind at one moment, and the other at another; or (4) that he had no very clearly defined ideas of inspiration, and might conceive that the divine assistance of which he was conscious, or which at least he implored, did not render his hymn the less truly the production of his own mind; that, in short, the superhuman and human elements were not incompatible with one another.

The first of these suppositions is, however, attended with this difficulty, that both conceptions, viz., that of independent unassisted composition, and that of inspiration, appear to be discoverable in all parts of the Rig-veda. As regards the second supposition, it might not be easy (in the uncertainty attaching to the Vedic tradition contained in the Anukramani or Vedic index) to show that such and such hymns were written by such and such rishis, rather than by others. It may, however, become possible by continued and careful comparison of the Vedic hymns, to arrive at some probable conclusions in regard to their authorship, so far at least as to determine that particular hymns should probably be assigned to particular eras, or families, rather than to others. I must, however, leave such investigations to be worked out, and the results applied to the present subject, by more competent scholars than myself.

III.—While in many passages of the Veda, an efficacy is ascribed to the hymns, which is perhaps nothing greater than natural religion teaches all men to attribute to their devotions, in other texts a mystical, magical, or supernatural power is represented as residing in the prayers and metres. (See Weber's Vājasaneyi-Sanhitā specimen, p. 61.)

Thus in R. V. i. 67, 3, it is said: Ajo na xām dād̄hāra pṛithivīm tastambha dyām mantrebhīḥ satyair | “(Agni) who like the unborn, supported the broad earth, and upheld the sky by true prayers.” The following is part of Sāyana's annotation on this verse: Mantrair divo dhāraṇām Taittirīye samāmnā-tam | “devā vā ādityasya svarga-lokasya parācho 'tipātād abibhayuḥ | taṁ chhandobhīr adrihan dhṛityā” iti | yadvā satyair mantraih stūyamāno 'gnir dyām tastambha iti | “The supporting of the sky by mantras is thus recorded in the Taittirīya: ‘The gods feared lest the sun and the heaven should fall down; they propped them up by metres.’ Or the verse may mean that Agni, being lauded by true mantras, upheld the sky.”

R. V. i. 164, 25.—Jagatā sindhuṁ divi astabhāyad rathantare sūryam pari apāsyat | gāyatrasya samidhas tisra āhus tato maknā pra ririche mahatvā | “By the Jagatī metre he fixed the waters in the sky; he beheld the sun in the Rathantara (a portion of the Sāma-veda): there are said to be three divisions of the Gāyatrī; hence it surpasses [all others] in power and grandeur.”

R. V. iii. 53, 12.—Viśvāmitrasya raxati brahma idam Bhāratam janam | “The prayer of Viśvāmitra protects this tribe of the Bharatas.”

R. V. v. 31, 4.—Brahmāna Indram mahayanto arkair avar-dhayan Ahaye hantavai u | “The priests magnifying Indra by their praises, have fortified him for slaying Agni.”

R. V. v. 40, 6.—. . . Gūlham sūryam tamasā apavratena turīyena brahmanā avindad Atriḥ | v. 8. . . Atriḥ sūryasya divi chaxur ādhāt svarbhānor apa māyā aghuxat | v. 9. Yam vai sūryam svarbhānus tamasā avidhyad āsurah | Atrayas tam anvavindan na hi anye āsaknuvan | “Atri, by his fourth prayer, discovered the sun which had been concealed by an unholy darkness. 8. . . Atri placed the eye of the sun in the sky, and hid the delusions of Svarbhānu. 9. The Atris discovered the sun, which Svarbhānu, of the Asura race, had pierced; no other could [effect this].”

R. V. vi. 75, 19.—. . . Devās tañ sarve dhūrvantu brahma varma mamāntaram | “May all the gods destroy him; the prayer is my protecting armour.”

R. V. vii. 19, 11.—Nu Indra śūra stavamānaḥ utī brahma-jūtas tanvā vavṛidhasva ityādī | “Heroic Indra, lauded with devotion, and impelled by our prayers, grow in body,” etc.

R. V. vii. 33, 3.—. . . Even nu kañ dāśarājñe Sudāsam prāvad Indro brahmaṇā vo Vasishṭhāḥ | 5. . . Vasishṭhasya stuvataḥ Indraḥ aśrod uruñ Trīsubhyaḥ akrīnod u lokam | “Indra has delivered Sūdas in the combat of the ten kings through your prayer, Vasishtha. 5. Indra heard Vasishtha when he praised, and opened a wide place for the Tritsus.”

R. V. viii. 15, 7 (= S. V. ii. 995).—Tava tyad indriyam bṛihat tava śushmam uta kratuñ vajrañ śísātī dhīshanā vareṇyam | “The hymn sharpens thy great strength, thy vigour, thy force, [and thy] glorious thunderbolt.”

(This verse is translated by Benfey, S. V. p. 286, who, in a note, thus describes the doctrine of the hymns: “Prayer sharpens the thunderbolt, and consequently Indra’s might; for the power, etc., of all the gods is derived from the sacrifices and prayers of men.”)

R. V. viii. 49, 9.—Pāhī naḥ Agne ekayā pāhī uta dvitīyayā pāhī gīrbhis tisṛibhīr ūrjāmpate pāhī chatasṛibhīr vaso | “Protect us, Agni, through the first, protect us through the second, protect us, lord of power, through three hymns, protect us through four, thou gracious one.”

The following passage celebrates the numbers of the metres :

R. V. x. 114, 8, 9.—Sahasradhā pañchadaśāni ukthā yāvad dyāvā-prithivī tāvad it tat | Sahasradhā mahimānaḥ sahasrañ yāvad brahma tāvatī vāk | kaś chkandasām yogam āveda dhīraḥ ko dhīshṇyām prati vācham papāda † kam ṛitvijām aṣṭamañ śūram āhur harī Indrasya ni chikāya kaḥ svit | “There are a thousand times fifteen ukthas; that extends [they extend?] as far as heaven and earth. A thousand times a thousand are the glorifications; speech is commensurate with devotion. What sage knows the [whole] series [or application] of the metres? Who has obtained all the forms of devotional speech? Whom do they call the eighth hero among priests? Who has perceived the two steeds of Indra?"

(The word dhishnya is said by Yāska, Nirukta, viii. 3, to be = to dhishanya, and that again to be = to dhishanābhava, "springing" from dhishanā, "speech," or "sacred speech.")

I conclude the series of texts relating to the power of the mantras by quoting the whole of the 130th hymn of the 10th Mandala of the R. V.: Yo yajño vīsvatas tantubhis tataḥ ekaśataṁ devakarmebhir āyataḥ | ime vayanti pitaro ye āyayuk pra vāya apa vaya āsate tate | 2. Pumān enam tanute utkrīṇatti pumān vi tatne adhi nāke asmīn | ime mayūkhā upa shedur ā sadaḥ sāmāni chakrus tasarāni otave | 3. Kā āsīt pramā pratimā kim nidānam ājyam kim āsīt paridhiḥ ka āsīt | chhandasḥ kim āsīt prāugam kim uktham yad devā devam ayajanta vīśve | 4. Agner gāyatrī abhavat sayugvā ushṇihayā Savitā sambabhūva | anusṭubhā Somaḥ ukthair mahasvān Bṛihaspater bṛihatī vācham āvat | 5. Virāṇ Mitrāvaruṇayor abhiśrīr Indrasya trishtub iha bhāgaḥ ahaḥ | Vīśvān devān jagatī āviveśa tena chākṛipre ṛishayo manushyāḥ | 6. Chākṛipre tena ṛishayo manushyā yajñe jāte pitaraḥ naḥ purāne | paśyan manye manasā chaxasā tān ye imaṁ yajñam ayajante pūrve | 7. Sahastomāḥ sahachhandasaḥ āvṛitaḥ sahapramāḥ ṛishayaḥ sapta daivyāḥ | pūrveshām panthām anudrīśya dhīrā anvālebhīre rathyo na raśmīn | "The [web of] sacrifice which is stretched on every side with threads, which is extended with one hundred [threads], the work of the gods,—these fathers who have arrived weave it; they sit where it is extended, [saying?] 'weave forwards, weave backwards.' The Man stretches it out and spins it, the Man has extended it over this sky. These rays [rishis?] approached the place of sacrifice; they made the Sāma verses the shuttles for the woof. What was the order [of the ceremonial], what the disposition, what the service, what the offering, what the enclosure, what the metre, what the preliminary chaunt, and what the hymn, when all the gods sacrificed to the god [or, offered up the god as a victim]? The gāyatrī was produced as the [metre] attendant upon Agni; Savitri appeared with the ushnih; and Soma, glorious through hymns (ukthas), with the anushtubh; the brīhatī preferred the voice of Bṛihaspati. The virāt attached itself to Mitra and Varuna; the trishṭubh, assigned to [?] the day, [accompanied] Indra. The jagatī entered into the Viśvedevas. By this means men were made rishis, [or rishis and men were formed]. By this means our mortal fathers were made rishis, when this ancient sacrifice was celebrated. Beholding, I know [or I believe I behold] with my mind, [as] an eye, those ancients who performed this sacrifice. The seven divine rishis, with hymns, with metres, [with] ritual forms, and with the prescribed arrangements, steadily contemplating the path of the ancients, have, like charioteers, followed after the rays."

(I shall not attempt to explain the meaning and purport of all the parts of this mystical hymn. The precise signification of some of the terms relating to the ceremonial of sacrifice in verse 3, is not supplied in any work to which I have access. In the rendering of those to which I refer, Mr. Colebrooke, who has translated the passage (Essays, i. 34, 35, or p. 18 of W. and N.'s ed.) differs from M. Langlois. My object in quoting the hymn is to show how the various metres are associated with the different deities, in this primeval and mysterious rite, and how a certain sanctity of character is thus imparted to them. The Atharva-veda (x. 7, 43, 44) gives the second verse somewhat differently from the R. V., as follows: Pumān enad vayati udgrīnatti pumān enad vi jabhāra adhi nāke | ime mayūkhā upa tastabhur divaṃ sāmāni chakrus tasaraṇi vātave | "The Man weaves and spins this: the Man has spread this over the sky. These rays have propped up the sky; they have made the Sāma verses shuttles for the woof.")

IV.—But whatever may have been the nature or the source of the supernal illumination to which the rishis laid claim, it is quite clear that some among them at least made no pretensions to anything like a perfect knowledge of all subjects, human and divine, as they occasionally confess their ignorance of matters in which they felt a deep interest and curiosity. This is shown in the following texts :

R. V. i. 164, 5.—Pākaḥ pṛichchhāmi manasā avijānan devānām enā nihitā padāni | vatse bashkaye adhi sapta tantūn vi tatnīre kavayaḥ otavai ū | 6. Achikitvān chikitasas' chid atra kavīn pṛichchhāmi vidmane na vidvān | vi yas tastambha shaḥ imā rajāṁsi ajasya rūpe kim api svid ekam | 37. Nu vi jānāmi yad iva idam asmi ninyah sannaddho manasā charāmi | yadā mā āgan prathamajāḥ ṛitasya ād id vāchaḥ aśnuve bhāgam asyāḥ | “Immature, not knowing in my mind, I enquire; these [are] the hidden or treasured truths [or abodes] of the gods; the sages have stretched out seven threads for a woof over the yearling calf [or over the sun, the abode of all things]. Not comprehending, I ask those sages who comprehend this matter; unknowing, [I ask] that I may know; what is the one thing, in the form of the uncreated, who has upheld these six worlds? 37. I do not recognize if I am like this; I go on perplexed and bound in mind. When the first-born sons of sacrifice [or truth] come to me, then I enjoy a share of that word.”

(I do not attempt to explain the proper sense of these obscure and mystical verses. It is sufficient for my purpose that they clearly express ignorance on the part of the speaker. Prof. Wilson's translation of the passages may be compared. Prof. Müller, Anc. Ind. Lit., p. 567, renders verse 37 as follows:—“I know not what this is that I am like; turned inward I walk, chained in my mind. When the first-born of time comes near me, then I obtain the portion of this speech.”)

vaḥ kavayo vidmane kam | “How many fires are there? how many suns? how many dawns? how many waters? I do not, fathers, say this to you in jest; I really ask you, sages, in order that I may know.”

R. V. x. 129, 5.—Tiraśchīno vitato rāsmir eshām adhaḥ svid āsīd upari svid āsīt | retodhā āsan mahimāna āsan svadhā avastat prayatīḥ parastāt | 6. Kaḥ addhā veda kaḥ iha pravochat kutah ājātā kutah iyaṁ viṣṛiṣṭīḥ | arvāg devā asya visarjanena athā ko veda yataḥ ābabhūva | 7. Iyaṁ viṣṛiṣṭīr yataḥ ābabhūva yadi vā dadhe yadi vā na | yaḥ asya adhyaxaḥ parama vyoman sa aṅga veda yadi vā na veda | “Their ray, obliquely extended, was it below, or was it above? There were generative sources, and there were great powers, svadhā (nature) below, and effort above. Who knows, who hath here declared whence this creation was produced, whence [it came]? The gods were subsequent to the creation of this universe; who then knows whence it sprang? Whence this creation sprang, whether it was formed or not,—He who, in the highest heavens, is the overseer of this universe,—he indeed knows, or he does not know.”

(The last verse may also be rendered, “He from whom this creation sprang,—whether he made it or not,—he who is the overseer of this universe, he knows, or he does not know.” See the translation of the whole hymn by Mr. Colebrooke in his Essays, i. 33, 34, or p. 17 of W. and N.’s ed. See also Prof. Müller’s translation and comment in pp. 559-564 of his History of Anc. Sanskrit Lit.)

We have seen (above, p. 45) that a claim is set up (by some unknown writer quoted by Sāyana) on behalf of the Veda that it can impart an understanding of all things, past and future, subtle, proximate, and remote; and that according to Sankara Āchāryya (on the Brahma sutras, i. 1, 3) as cited above, p. 52, note, the knowledge which it manifests, approaches to omniscience. All such proud pretensions are, however, plainly enough disavowed by the rishis who uttered the complaints of ignorance which I have just adduced. It is indeed urged by Sāyana (see above, pp. 45, 46) in answer to the objection, that passages like R. V. x. 129, 5, 6, can possess no authority as sources of knowledge, since they express doubt,—that this is not their object, but that it rather is to intimate by a figure of speech the extreme profundity of the Divine essence, and the great difficulty which any persons not well versed in the sacred writings must experience in comprehending it. There can, however, be little doubt that the authors of the passages I have cited did feel their own ignorance and intended to give utterance to this feeling. As, however, such confessions of ignorance on the part of the rishis, if admitted, would have been incompatible with the doctrine that the Veda was an infallible source of divine knowledge, it became necessary for the later theologians who held that doctrine to deny, or explain away, the plain sense of those expressions.

It should be noticed that these confessions of ignorance and fallibility are by no means inconsistent with the supposition that the rishis may have conceived themselves to be animated and directed in the composition of their hymns by a divine impulse. Though the two rivals, Vasishtha and Viśvāmītra, to enhance their own importance, and recommend themselves to their royal patrons, talk proudly about the wide range of their knowledge (see above, pp. 142-144), it is not necessary to imagine that, either in their idea or in that of the other ancient Indian sages (any more than in that of the Grecian bards), inspiration and infallibility were convertible or co-extensive terms. Both the Greek minstrel and the Indian rishi may have believed that they received, indeed, such supernatural aid as enabled them to perform what they must otherwise have left unattempted, but which after all resulted in only a partial illumination, and left them still liable to mistake and doubt.

I must also remark that this belief in their own inspiration which I imagine the rishis to have held, falls very far short of the conceptions which later writers, whether Naiyāyika, Mīmāṃsaka, or Vedantist, entertain in regard to the supernatural origin and authority of the Veda. The gods from whom the rishis supposed that they derived their illumination, at least Agni, Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Soma, Pūshan, etc., would all fall under the category of productions, or divinities created in time. This is clearly shown by the comments of Śankara on the Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 28 (above, pp. 69, 70). But if these gods were themselves created, and even (as we are told in the Rig-veda itself, x. 129, 6, cited in p. 178) produced subsequently to some other parts of the creation, the hymns with which they inspired the rishis, could not have been eternal. The only one of the deities referred to in the Rig-veda as sources of illumination, to whom this remark would perhaps not apply, is Vāch or Sarasvatī, who is identified with the supreme Brahma in the passage of the Vrihad Aranyaka Upanishad quoted above (p. 108, note 53); though this idea probably originated subsequently to the era of the hymns. But it is not to created gods, like Agni, Indra, and others of the same class, that the origin of the Veda is referred by the Naiyāyikas, Mīmānsakas, or Vedantists. The Naiyāyikas represent the eternal Īśvara as the author of the Veda; at least, this is the opinion of Udayana Acharyya, the writer of the Kusumānjali (in the passages which I shall quote in the Appendix in a note on p. 81). And the Mīmānsakas and Vedantists, as we have seen (pp. 52-73, and note 39, pp. 51, 52), either affirm that the Veda is uncreated, or derive it from the eternal Brahma. Their view, consequently (unless we admit an exception in reference to Vāch), differs from that of the Vedic rishis themselves, who do not seem to have had any idea, either of their hymns being uncreated, or of their being derived from the eternal Brahma.

As regards the relation of the rishis to deities like Indra, it is also deserving of notice that later mythologists represent the former, not only as quite independent of the latter, and as gifted with an inherent capacity of raising themselves by their own austerities to the enjoyment of various superhuman faculties, but even as possessing the power of rivalling the gods themselves, and taking possession of their thrones. See the stories of Nahusha and Viśvāmitra in the First Part of this work, particularly pp. 68, 103, and 108. Compare also the passages from the Rig-veda, x. 154, 2, and x. 167, 1, quoted above, p. 146, where the rishis are said to have attained to heaven, and Indra to have conquered it, by devotion (tapas).

SECT. V.—Texts from the Upanishads, showing the opinions of the authors regarding their own inspiration, or that of their predecessors.

I shall now adduce some passages from the different Upanishads, to show what opinions their authors entertained either in regard to their own inspiration, or that of the earlier sages, from whom they assert that their doctrine was derived by tradition.

I. Śvetāśvatara Up. v. 2 (already quoted above, p. 96).—Yo yoniṁ yoniṁ adhitishṭhaty eko viśvāni rūpāni yonīścha sarvāḥ ṛishim prasūtaṁ Kapilam yas tam agre jñānair bibhartti jāyamaṇaṅcha paśyēt | “He who alone presides over every place of production, over all forms, and all sources of birth, who formerly nourished with various knowledge that rishi Kapila, who had been born, and beheld him at his birth.”

II. Śvetāśvatara Up. vi. 21.—Tapah-prabhāvād veda-prasādāchcha Brahma ha Śvetāśvataro 'tha vidvān | atyāśramibhyaḥ paramam pavitram provācha samyag ṛishi-saṅgha-jusṭam | “By the power of austerity, and by the grace of the Veda, the wise Svetāśvatara declared perfectly to the men in the highest of the four orders, the supreme and holy Brahma, who is sought after by the company of rishis.” (Dr. Røer’s translation, p. 68, follows the commentator in rendering the first words of the verse thus: “By the power of his austerity, and the grace of God.” This, however, is not the literal meaning of the words veda-prasādāchcha, a reading the correctness of which is not denied.)

III. Mundaka Up. i. 1 ff. (quoted above, p. 18, more at length).—Brahmā devānām prathamah sambabhūva viśvasya kartā bhuvanasya goptā | Sa brahma-vidyām sarva-vidyā-pratishṭhām Atharvāya jyeshṭha-putrāya prāha | “Brahma was born the first of the gods, he who is the maker of the universe and the supporter of the world. He declared the science of Brahma, the foundation of all the sciences, to Atharva, his eldest son.”

IV. Having received instruction in the Veda from the family of his religious teacher in the prescribed manner, and in the time which remains after performing his duty to his preceptor; and when he has ceased from this, continuing his religious studies at home, in his family, in a pure spot, communicating a knowledge of duty [to young men], withdrawing all his senses into himself, doing injury to no living creature, away from holy places [?], thus passing all his days, a man attains to the world of Brahma, and does not return again, and does not return again, [i.e., is not subjected to any future births].”

I quote the commencement of Śankara's comment on this passage: Tad ha etad ātma-jñānam sopakaranam om ity etad axaram ityādyaiḥ saha upāsanaḥ tadvāchakena granthena aṣṭādhyāya-laxanena saha Brahmā Hiranyagarbhaḥ Paramēśvaro vā tadvāreṇa Prajāpataye Kaśyapāya uvācha | asāv api Manave svaputrāya | Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ | ityevam śruty-arthasampradāya-paramparayā āgatam upanishad-vijñānam adyāpi vidvatsv avagamyate | “This knowledge of soul, with its instruments, with the sacred monosyllable om and other formulæ of devotion, and with the book distinguished as containing eight chapters, which sets forth all these topics, [viz., the Chhândogya Upanishad itself] was declared by Brahmā Hiranyagarbha, or by Parameśvara (the supreme God), through his agency, to the Prajāpati Kaśyapa. The latter in his turn declared it to his son Manu, and Manu to his descendants. In this manner the sacred knowledge contained in the Upanishads, having been received through successive transmission of the sense of the Veda from generation to generation, is to this day understood among learned men."

I ADDUCE here some further passages from Indian authors in addition to those already cited in pp. 17-19, which depreciate the ceremonial, or exoteric parts of the Vedas, in comparison with the esoteric knowledge of Brahma.

I. My attention has been drawn to the following passage of the Bhagavad Gītā, ii. 42 ff., by its quotation in an (as yet) unpublished work on Hindu Philosophy by the Rev. Professor K. M. Banerjea, of Calcutta: Yām imām pushpitām vācham pravādanty avipaśchitaḥ | veda-vāda-ratāḥ pārtha nānyad astīti vādīnaḥ | kāmātmānaḥ svarga-parāḥ janma-karma-phalu-pradām | kriyā-viśeṣha-bahulām bhogaiśvarya-gatim prati | bhogaiśvarya-prasaktānām tayā 'pahṛita-chetasām | vyavasāyātmikā buddhiḥ samādhau na vidhīyate | traiguṇya-viśayā vedā nistraiguṇyo bhavārjuna | . . . yāvān artha udapāne sarvataḥ samplutodake | tāvān sarveshu vedeshu brāhmaṇasya vijānataḥ | "A flowery doctrine (promising future births and the reward of works, prescribing numerous ceremonies, with a view to future gratification and glory) is preached by unlearned men, devoted to the injunctions of the Veda, assertors of its exclusive importance, sensual in disposition, and seekers after paradise. The restless minds of the men who, through this [flowery doctrine], have become bereft of wisdom, and are ardent in the pursuit of future enjoyment and glory, are not applied to contemplation. The Vedas have for their objects the three qualities (sattva, rajas, tamas, or 'goodness,' 'passion,' and 'darkness' ; but be thou, Arjuna, free from these three qualities. . . . As great as is the use of a well which is surrounded on every side by overflowing waters, so great [and no greater?] is the use of the Vedas to a Brahman endowed with true knowledge."

II. Chhāndogya Up. p. 473 (Colebrooke's Essays, i. 12).—Adhīhi bhagava iti ha upasāda Sanatkumāraṁ Nāradaḥ | taṁ ha uvācha yad vcttha tena mā upasāda tatas te ūrddhvaṁ vaxyāmi iti | sa ha uvācha ṛigvedam bhagavo 'dhyemi yajurvedaṁ sāma-vedaṁ ātharvanaṁ chaturtham itihāsa-purānam pañchamaṁ vedānāṁ vedam pitryaṁ rāsiṁ daivaṁ nidhiṁ vākovākyaṁ ekāyanaṁ deva-vidyāṁ brahma-vidyāṁ bhūta-vidyāṁ xatra-vidyāṁ naxatra-vidyāṁ sarpa-deva-jana-vidyāṁ etad bhagavo 'dhyemi | so 'ham bhagavo mantra-vid evāsmi na ātma-vid | śrutam hy eva me bhagavaddṛiṣebhyas 'tarati śokam ātma-vid' iti so 'ham bhagavaḥ śochāmi tam mā bhagavān śokasya pāraṁ tārayatv iti | taṁ ha uvācha yad vai kiñcha etad adhyagīṣṭhā nāma evaitat | nāma vā ṛigvedo yajur-vedaḥ sāmaveda ātharvanaś chaturtha itihāsa-purānaḥ pañchamo vedānāṁ vedaḥ pitryo rāsiṁ daivo nidhir vākovākyaṁ ekāyanaṁ deva-vidyā brahma-vidyā bhūta-vidyā xatra-vidyā naxatra-vidyā sarpa-deva-jana-vidyā nāma evaitad nāma upāsva iti | sa yo nāma brahma ity upāste yāvad nāmno gataṁ tatra asya yathā kāmachāro bhavati yo nāma brahma ity upāste | asti bhagavo nāmno bhūtya iti | nāmno vāva bhūyo 'sti iti | tan me bhagavān bravītva iti |

"Nārada approached Sanatkumāra, saying, 'Instruct me, venerable sage.' He received for answer, 'Approach me with [i.e., tell me] that which thou knowest; and I will declare to thee whatever more is to be learnt.' Nārada replied, 'I am instructed, venerable sage, in the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Ātharvana, [which is] the fourth, the Itihāsas and Puranas, [which are] the fifth Veda of the Vedas, the rites of the pitris, arithmetic, the knowledge of portents, and of great periods, the art of reasoning, ethics, interpretation, the knowledge of Scripture, demonology, the science of war, the knowledge of the stars, the sciences of serpents and deities ; this is what I have studied. I, venerable man, know only the hymns (mantras); while I am ignorant of soul. But I have heard from reverend sages like yourself that “the man who is acquainted with soul overpasses grief.” Now I, venerable man, am afflicted ; but do thou conduct me across my grief.’ Sanatkumāra answered, ‘That which thou hast studied is nothing but name. The Rig-veda is name ; and so are the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Ātharvana, the fourth, and the Itihāsas and Puranas, the fifth Veda of the Vedas, etc. [all the other branches of knowledge are here enumerated just as above],—all these are but name : worship the name. He who worships a name with the persuasion that it is Brahma, holds as it were a dōminion at his will over all which that name comprehends ;—such is the prerogative of him who worships name with the persuasion that it is Brahma.’ ‘Is there anything, venerable man,’ asked Nārada, ‘which is more than name?’ ‘There is,’ he replied, ‘something more than name?’ ‘Tell it to me,’ rejoined Nārada.”

(Śankara interprets the words pañchamaṁ vedānāṁ vedam differently from what I have done. He separates the words vedānāṁ vedam from pañchamam and makes them to mean the means of knowing the Vedas, i.e., grammar. See above, p. 107.)

III. Bṛihadāraṇyaka Up. iv. 3, 22 (p. 792 ff., p. 228-9 of Dr. Röer’s English).—Atra pitā apitā bhavati mātā amātā lokā alokā devā adevā vedā avedāḥ | atra steno ’steno bhavati bhrūṇa-hā abhrūṇa-hā chāṇḍālo ’chāṇḍālāḥ paulkaso ’paulkaśḥ śramāno ’sramānas tāpaso ’tāpaso nanvāgatam punyena ananvāgatam pāpena tīrṇo hi tadā sarvān śokān hṛidayasya bhavati | “In that [condition of transcendental knowledge] a father is no father, a mother is no mother, the worlds are no worlds, the gods are no gods, and the Vedas are no Vedas. In that condition a thief is no thief, a murderer of embryos is no murderer of embryos, a Chāṇḍāla no Chāṇḍāla, a Paulkasa no Paulkasa, a Śramana no Śramana, a devotee no devotee ; the saint has then no relation either to merit or sin ; for he then crosses over all griefs of the heart."

(I quote Śankara's explanation of the unusual words nanvāgata and ananvāgata: Nanvāgataṁ na anvāgatam ananvāgatam asambaddham ity etat puṇyena śāstra-vihītena karmanā tathā pāpena vihitākaraṇa-pratishiddha-kriyā-laxaṇena | " Nanvāgata, i.e., na (not) anvāgata, or ananvāgata, i.e., asambaddha. This condition is unconnected either with merit, i.e., action enjoined by the śāstra, or with sin, i.e., action distinguished as the neglect of what is enjoined, or the doing of what is forbidden.")

IV. To the same effect the great sage Nārada is made to speak in the Bhāgavata Pur. iv. 29, 42 ff.: Prajāpati-patiḥ sākād bhagavān Girīśo Manuḥ | Daxādayaḥ prajādhyaxā naiṣṭhikāḥ Sanakādayaḥ | Marīchir Atryangirasau Pulastyaḥ Pulahaḥ Kratuḥ | Bhṛīgur Vasishṭha ity ete mad-antā brahmavādīnaḥ | adyāpi vāchaspatayas tapo-vidyā-samādhībhiḥ | paśyanto 'py na paśyanti paśyantam Paramēśvaram | śabda-brahmaṇi dushpāre charanta uruvistare | mantra-lingair vyavachchinnam bhajanto na viduḥ param | yadā yasyānuḡrihṇāti bhagavān ātma-bhāvitaḥ | sa jahāti matiṁ loke vede cha parinīṣṭhitām | tasmāt karmasu varṣiṣmann ajñānād, artha-kāśiṣhu | mā 'rtha-dṛiṣṭiṁ krīṭhāḥ śrotra-sparśiṣhv aśprīṣṭa-vasṭuḥ | sva-lokaṁ na vidus te vai yatra devo Janārdanaḥ | āhur dhūmra-dhīyo vedaṁ sakarmakam atad-vidaḥ | āstīrya darbhaviḥ prāg-agraiviḥ kārtsnyena xiti-maṇḍalam | stabdho vṛihad-vadhād mānī karma nāvaiṣi yat param | tat karma Hari-toṣaṁ yat sāvīdyā tan-matir yayā | "Brahmā himself, the divine Girīśa (Śiva), Manu, Daxa and the other Prajāpatis, Sanaka and other devotees, Marīchi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhṛīgu, Vasishṭha—all these assertors of Brahma (as the sole essence), and masters of speech, including myself (Nārada) as the last, though seeing, are yet, to this day, unable, by austerity, by science, by contemplation, to see Paramēśvara (the supreme God), who sees all things. Wandering in the vast field of the verbal Divinity (the Veda), which is difficult to traverse, men do not recognise the supreme, while they worship him as he is circumscribed by the attributes specified in the hymns (mantras). When the Divine Being regards any man with favour, that man, sunk in the contemplation of soul, abandons all thoughts which are set upon the world and the Veda. Cease, therefore, Varhishmat, through ignorance, to look upon works which merely seem to promote the chief good, as if they truly effected that object, (works) which only touch the ear, but do not touch the reality. The misty-minded men, who, ignorant of the Veda, declare that works are its object, do not know [his?] own world, where the divine Janārdana abides. Thou who, obstinate man that thou art, strewest the whole earth with sacrificial grass, with its ends turned to the east, and art proud of thy numerous immolations, thou knowest not what is the highest work of all. That by which Hari (Vishnu) is pleased, is work; that by which the thoughts are fixed on him, is science.”

I copy the comment on a part of this passage, viz., on verses 45 and 46 : Śabda-brahmaṇi vede urur vistāro yasya arthato 'py pāra-sūnye tasmin varttamānā mantrānām lingair vajra-hastavādī-guṇa-yukta-vividha-devatā-bhīdhāna-sāmarthyaiḥ parichchikṣnam eva Indrādī-rūpam tat-tat-karmāgrahena bhajantaḥ param Paramēśvaraṁ na viduḥ || Tarhy anyah ko nāma | karmādy-āgrahaṁ hitvā paramēśvaram eva bhajed ity ata āha 'yadā yam anugrihṇāti' | anugrahe hetuḥ | ātmani bhāvitaḥ san sa tadā loke loka-vyavahāre vede cha karma-mārge parinishṭhitām matiṁ tyajati | “ Men, conversant with the verbal Divinity, the Veda, of which the extent is vast, and which, as regards its meaning also, is shoreless, worshipping Paramēśvara [the supreme God] under the form of Indra, etc., and circumscribed by the marks specified in the hymns, i.e., circumscribed by various particular energies denominated deities, who are characterised by such attributes as ‘wielder of the thunderbolt,’ etc.; worshipping Him, I say, thus, with an addiction to particular rites, men do not know the supreme God. What other [god], then, [is there]? He therefore says, in the words, ‘When he regards any one with favour,' etc., let a man, abandoning all addiction to works, etc., worship the supreme God alone. The reason for this favour [is supplied in the following words]: 'Sunk in the contemplation of soul, he then relinquishes his regard directed to the business of the world and to the Veda, i.e., to the method of works.'

Mahīdhara on the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (Weber's ed. p. 1) says, in regard to the division of the Vedas: Tatrādaḥ Brahma-param-parayā prāptaṁ Vedaṁ Vedavyāso manda-matīn manushyān vichīntya tat-kṛipayā chaturdhā vyasya Rīg-yajuh-sāmātharvā-khyāṁś chaturō vedān Paila-Vaiśampāyana-Jaimini-Sumantu-bhyaḥ kramād upadideśa te cha sva-śishyebhyaḥ | Evam param-parayā sahasra-śākhō Vedo jātaḥ | "Vedavyasa, having regard to men of dull understanding, in kindness to them, divided into four parts the Veda which had been originally handed down by tradition from Brahmā, and taught the four Vedas, called Rik, Sāman, Yajush, and Atharvan, in order, to Paila, Vaisampāyana, Jaimini, and Sumantu; and they again to their disciples. In this way, by tradition, the Veda of a thousand śākhās was produced."

The following extract from the account of the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā philosophy, given in the Sarva-darsāna-sangraha of Mādhava Achāryya (Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 127 ff.), contains a fuller summary of the controversy between the Mīmāṃsakas and the Naiyāyikas respecting the grounds on which the authority of the Veda should be regarded as resting, than is supplied in any of the passages which I have quoted in the body of the work. As I have not studied the works of Śābara, Kumārila, Prabhākara, or the other commentators on the Mīmāṃsā aphorisms, I am unable to say how far this ingenious and interesting summary is borrowed from those authors. It is probably taken from them in great part, but the special references made, in the course of the discussion, to Udayana Acharyya, Vāgīśvara, and the author of the Nyāya-bhūṣhaṇa, and the answers made to their objections, rather favour the supposition that the arguments urged by the author of the summary are in part original.

“Be it so. But how [the Naiyāyikas may ask] is the Veda alleged to be underived from any personal author? How can you regard the Vedas as being thus underived, when there is no evidence by which this character can be substantiated? The argument urged by you Mīmānsakas is, that while there is an unbroken tradition, still no author of the Veda is remembered, in the same way as [none is remembered] in the case of the soul (or self). But this argument is very weak, because the asserted characteristic [unbrokenness of tradition] is not proved; since those who maintain the personal origin [i.e., origin from a person] of the Veda, object that the tradition [regarding the Veda] was interrupted at the dissolution of the universe (pralaya).¹ And further: what is meant by the assertion that no author of the Veda is remembered? Is it (1) that no author is believed? or (2) that no author is the object of recollection? The first alternative cannot be accepted, since it is acknowledged [by us] that God (Paramēśvara) is proved to be the author. Nor can the second alternative be admitted, as it cannot stand the test of the following dilemma, viz., Is it meant (a) that no author of the Veda is recollected by some one person, or (b) by any person whatever? The former supposition breaks down, since it fails when tried by such stanzas as this, 'he who is religious, and has overcome pride and anger,' etc.² And the latter supposition is inadmissible, since it would be impossible for any person who was not omniscient to know that no author of the Veda was recollected by any person whatever.

"And moreover, [the Naiyāyikas proceed], the sentences of the Veda must have originated with a personal author, as proof exists that they had such an origin, since they have the character of sentences, like those of Kālidasa and other writers. The sentences of the Veda have been composed by an authoritative person, since, while they possess authority, they have, at the same time, the character of sentences, like those of Manu and other sages.

"But [ask the Mīmāṃsakas] may it not be assumed that, 'All study of the Veda was preceded by an earlier study of it by the pupil's preceptor, since the study of the Veda must always have had one common character, which was the same in former times as now;'³ and that this inference has force to prove [? that the Veda had no author or was eternal]? Such reasoning [the Naiyāyikas answer] is of no avail as proof, [for it might be said in the same way that] 'All study of the Mahābhārata was preceded by an earlier study of it by the pupil's preceptor, since the study of the Mahābhārata, from the mere fact of its being such, [must have had the same character in former times]

³ The purport of this verse is, that as every generation of students of the Veda must have been preceded by an earlier generation of teachers, and as there is no reason to assume any variation in this process by supposing that there ever had been any student who taught himself; we have thus a recessus ad infinitum, and must of necessity conclude that the Vedas had no author, but were eternal.

as it has now ;' and this mere semblance of an argument would be of the same value in either case. But [the Mīmāṃsakas will ask whether there is not a difference between these two cases of the Veda and the Mahābhārata, since] the smṛiti declares that [Vishnu incarnate as] Vyāsa was the author of the latter,—according to such texts as this, 'Who else than Pundarikāxa (the lotus-eyed Vishnu) could be the maker of the Mahābhārata?' (see above, p. 21),—[whilst nothing of this sort is recorded in any Śāstra in regard to the Veda]. This argument, however, is powerless, since it is proved by these words of the Puruṣa-sūkta, 'From him sprang the ṛik and sāma verses and the metres, and from him the yajush verses,' (above, p. 50) that the Veda had a maker.

"Further, [proceed the Naiyāyikas], we must suppose that sound [on the eternity of which the eternity and uncreatedness of the Veda depend] is not eternal, since, while it belongs to a genus, it can, like a jar, be perceived by the external organs of beings such as ourselves. But [rejoin the Mīmāṃsakas], is not this inference of yours refuted by the proof arising from the fact that we recognize the letter G, for example, as the same we have heard before? This argument, [replies the Naiyāyika], is extremely weak, for the recognition in question having reference to a community of species (as in the case of such words as 'a jasmine tree with sprouted tendrils [?] cut and grown again,' etc.) has no force to refute my assertion [that letters are not eternal].

"But, [asks the Mīmāṃsaka], how can the Vedas have been composed by the incorporeal Parameśvara (God), who has no palate or other organs of speech, and therefore cannot enunciate letters? This objection, [answers the Naiyāyika], is worthless, because, though Parameśvara is naturally incorporeal, he can yet, by way of sport, assume a body, in order to shew kindness to his devoted worshippers. Consequently, the arguments in favour of the doctrine that the Veda had no personal author are inconclusive.

“ I shall now, [says the Mīmāṃsaka], clear up all these difficulties. What is meant by this pauruṣheyatva (‘derivation from a personal author’) which it is sought to prove? Is it (1) mere procession (utpannatva) from a person (puruṣha), like the procession of the Veda from persons such as ourselves, when we daily utter it? or (2) is it the arrangement, with a view to its manifestation,—of knowledge acquired through other channels of information, in the sense in which persons like ourselves compose a treatise? If the first meaning be intended, there will be no dispute. If the second sense be meant, I ask whether the Veda is proved [to be authoritative] in virtue (a) of its being founded on inference, or (b) of its being founded on supernatural information? The former alternative (a) [i.e., that the Veda derives its authority from being founded on inference] cannot be correct, since this theory breaks down, if it be applied to the sentences of the Mālatī Mādhava or any other secular poem, [which may contain inferences destitute of authority]. If, on the other hand, you say (b), that the contents of the Veda are distinguished from those of other books by having authority, this explanation also will fail to satisfy a philosopher. For the word of the Veda is [defined to be] a word which proves things that are not proveable by any other evidence. Now if it could be established that this vedic word did nothing more than prove things that are proveable by other evidence, we should be involved in the same sort of contradiction as if a man were to say that his mother was a barren woman. And even if we conceded that Parameśvara might in sport assume a body, it would not be conceivable that [in that case] he should perceive things beyond the reach of the senses, from the want of any means of apprehending objects removed from him in place, in time, and in nature. Nor is it to be thought that his eyes and other senses alone would have the power of producing such knowledge, since men can only attain to conceptions corresponding with what they have perceived. This is what has been said by the Guru (Prabhākara) when he refutes [the supposition of] an omniscient person : 'Whenever any object is perceived [by the organ of sight] in its most perfect exercise, such perception can only have reference to the vision of something very distant or very minute, since no organ can go beyond its own proper objects, as e.g., the ear can never become cognizant of form.' Hence the authority of the Veda does not arise in virtue of any supernatural information [acquired by the Deity in a corporeal shape, and embodied in the sacred text].

"In spite of the weight attaching [?]⁴ to the rule of Pānini (see above, p. 87) that the grammatical affix with which the words Kāthaka, Kālāpa, and Taittirīya are formed, imparts to those derivatives the sense of 'uttered by' Katha, Kālāpa, etc., it is established that the names first mentioned have reference [not to those parts of the Veda being 'uttered' by the sages in question, but] to the fact that these sages instituted the practice of studying those parts of the Veda. Here also these appellations ought to be understood in the same manner, as referring to the fact of those sages being the institutors of the study of the Veda; and we are not to think that the eternity of sound [or of the words of the Veda] is disproved by the force of any inference [to be drawn from those names], since this would be at variance with the recognition [of letters as the same we knew before] (see above, Mīmāṃsa Sūtra, i. 13, p. 56). Nor, even though [numerical] unity were not [predicable of each particular letter] (see Mīmāṃsa Sūtra, i. 20, above p. 58), is it proper to insist that each letter is a term expressive of a species. The supposition that it is a generic term is opposed [?] by the intervention of powerful contrary arguments; or by our perceiving that sometimes this character would fail to be applicable. In respect to those who, while they observe that [a definition] is inapplicable in some cases, yet disregard this circumstance, the following remark has been made by those [the Mīmāṃsakas, etc.] who maintain the self-proving power [of the Veda]: 'The man who through bewilderment disregards even an unknown refutation, being in all matters full of doubt, perishes.'

"But [the Naiyāyikas will ask], does not the recognition [of G and other letters as the same we knew before] refer to them as belonging to the [same] species, and not as being the [same] individual letters, since, in fact, they are perceived to be different [as uttered by] each person, and since otherwise it would be impossible for us to make any distinction [between different readers, as when we say], 'Somaśarman is reading?' This objection, however, has as little brilliancy as its predecessors, and has been answered in this way, viz., that as there is no proof of any distinction of individuality between G's, etc., there is no evidence that we ought to suppose any such thing as a species of G's, etc. [i.e., of G's and other letters each constituting a species]. Just as to the man who is ignorant that G's constitute a species, [that letter], though one only, becomes (through distinction of place, magnitude, form [?], individuals, and position [?]) variously modified as distinct in place, as small, as great, as long, or as short, in the same way, to the man who is ignorant of an individuality of G's, [i.e., of G's being numerically different from each other], this letter, though only one, appears, from the distinction existing between the different persons who utter it, to be connected with their respective peculiarities; and as contrary characters are in this way erroneously ascribed [to the letter G], there is a fallacious appearance of distinctness [between different G's]. But does this ascription of contrary characters which we thus regard as creating a difference [between G's], result from (1) the nature of the thing, or (2) from mere appearance? There is no proof of the first alternative, as otherwise an inherent difference being admitted between different G's, it would be established that Chaitra had uttered ten [different] G's, and not [the same] G ten times. But on the second supposition, there is no proof of any inherent distinction [between G's]; for inherent oneness (or identity) is not destroyed by a difference of extrinsic disguises [or characteristics]. We must not conceive, from the merely apparent distinctness [occasioned by the separation of its parts] by jars, etc., that there is any inherent distinctness in the atmosphere itself. The fact is that when the action of sound is intercepted [by the atmosphere], it ceases to be audible.⁵ It has been said by the Āchāryya, 'The object which the Naiyāyikas seek, by supposing a species, is in fact gained from the letter itself; and the object at which they aim by supposing an individuality in letters, is attained from audible sounds (i.e., the separate utterances of the different letters), so that the hypothesis of species, etc., is useless.' And we thus reach the conclusion that, 'since, in respect of sounds (letters), recognition has so irresistible a power, [literally, wakes, unrestrained], it alone repels all inferences against the eternity [of sound, or the Veda].

This refutes what has been said by Vāgīśvara in the Māna-manohara, that 'sound is not eternal, because it is the quality of a particular organ, as form is of the eye;' for it is to those who declare sound to be a substance, [and to them only?] that the perception [of sound in this manner] is established, while as regards audible sound, the assertion of this perceptibility is merely a proving of what is admitted; and because this theory of sound being the quality of a particular sense is disproved by the characteristic of not making itself [always?] audible.

⁵ I am by no means sure that this sentence is correctly rendered, but have no preferable translation to suggest. I owe the reader some apology for the imperfect and tentative character of my version in many parts of the remainder of this extract. But having begun the translation, I was naturally anxious to carry it on as far as I could. As this part of the Sarva-darśana-sangraha has not before been rendered into any European language, and we possess as yet no work which explains completely all the technical terms of Indian logic and philosophy, I am unfortunately in an opposite predicament to that on which Kālidāsa congratulated himself at the commencement of his task of celebrating the race of the Raghus, when he was able to say that he could enter upon his subject, which had been previously handled by earlier poets, with the same ease, as a thread penetrates into a gem which has been perforated by a diamond" (manau vajra-samulķīrṇe sūtrasyevasti me gatīḥ). The reader must just take this part of my translation for so much as he finds it to be worth. But I think that, though I may have erred in details, I have not mistaken the general scope.

And Udayana—maintaining by a long dissertation that, though the substratum be not perceptible by sense, still the non-existence [of sound] is perceptible, and [observing it to be] a customary occurrence that when noise ceases, sound is produced—alleges that perception, which is the cause of that phenomenon, is a proof of the non-eternity of sound. He also is refuted by showing the merely adventitious character of the [effect produced on letters by the] influence of opposite qualities [in the speakers], just as a sacrificial knife is only stained superficially by a bloody oblation. And, again, the difficulty which has been raised to the eternity of sound by the author of the Nyāya-bhūṣhaṇa, on the ground that it is not observed to be constantly perceived,—this difficulty also is removed by the admitted fact that sound which has been articulated in utterance is perceived. Once more, the inference which is drawn in reference to there being a fixed relation between the articulator and the [sound] to be articulated, from sound having reference to the organs [of many persons?] at one and the same time, this is inconclusive in itself[?], there being no confused noise. And hence, as every stain of doubt which has come to light has been set aside by the underived character of the Veda, its authority as proof in matters of duty is clearly established.

“ Be it so. But [verse] ‘the Sāṅkhyas say that both authoritativeness and non-authoritativeness are self-derived; the Naiyāyikas maintain that both are dependent on something external; the Bauddhas assert that non-authoritativeness is self-derived, while authoritativeness depends on something extraneous to itself; and the upholders of the Veda declare that authoritativeness is self-derived, and the absence of it dependent on something external.’ Now, when we observe the differences between the assertors of these several views, how can it be admitted as a settled point that there is such a thing as self-proved authority for duty? And what is this self-proved authority? What is its source (lit. birth)? Does it spring (1) from self-dependent knowledge? or (2) from the constituents (or totality) of self-dependent knowledge? or (3) does it depend on some special knowledge springing from the constituents (or totality) of knowledge? or (4) does it depend on some special knowledge springing from the mere constituents (or totality) of knowledge? The first supposition is faulty, from the fact that cause and effect, which are categorically distinct, cannot properly be placed in the same class, or predicated of the same subject. The second supposition is no better, owing to the objection that, whereas knowledge is a quality, the character of a substance is here ascribed to its self-evidencing authority, since the function of a material cause is assigned to it. Nor can the third supposition be allowed, for as self-evidencing power is either an attribute (upādhi) or a species, production (i.e., the being produced) does not apply to it. The condition of authoritativeness is the absolute absence of any defect in knowledge which has not recollection [?] for its basis. Now such authoritativeness cannot possibly be produced, as it is admitted that absolute non-existence is eternal; and consequently the production of species also is inadmissible. The fourth supposition is equally faulty, for special knowledge is something unauthoritative, and the constituents of the general [or genus] enter into the constituents of the special, as the substance of a tree in general enters into the substance of the [particular] tree, the śinśapa (sisu). Otherwise we should be involved in the absurdity that it had no cause. Hence that which depends on what is produced from the constituents of knowledge is confessedly unauthoritative, from its dependence on something external, and thus your definition will fail by embracing too much (ativyāpti).

“We shall now (interposes the Mīmāṃsaka) propose a fifth supposition. What do you mean by ‘springing from the mere constituents, [or simple totality] of knowledge?’ Does it mean (1) ‘the springing from the constituents of a knowledge which is accompanied by the absence of defects (i.e., which is faultless?),’ or (2) ‘the springing from the constituents of a knowledge which is unaccompanied by the absence of defects

(i.e., which is faulty)?' It cannot be the first, for 'a springing from the constituents of knowledge which is accompanied by the absence of defects [i.e., which is faultless] is simply authoritativeness derived from something external, as is allowed by those who maintain that authoritativeness is derived from something external. Nor can it be the second, for the character of accompaniedness being substantiated in regard to any object, by the circumstance of its being accompanied by the absence of defects,⁶

If you object that non-existence [as in this case of the non-existence of defects] cannot be a cause, then you must tell us whether it (non-existence) is an effect or not. If it be not, then from the [consequent] impossibility [of any substance], a piece of cloth [for instance], being destroyed, we are entangled in the absurdity of supposing that it must be eternal. But if non-existence be an effect, what error is there in asserting its causality also? thus this rope binds [you] at both ends. And Udayana says (Kusumānjali, i. 10), 'Just as existence, so also non-existence is regarded as a cause, as well as an effect.'

And now we shall apply this: variously-understood truth (pramā) is (our opponents say) dependent on a cause distinct from the cause of knowledge, from the fact of its being a production, and as such, possessing the particular character of a production, just as is the case with error [or the absence of truth, apramā]. And authoritativeness is regarded as being derived from something external, owing to the doubtfulness [of the student?] before he has made the matter a subject of repeated study, just as is the case with unauthoritativeness. But to describe as self-proved authoritativeness that which, in its origin and in its [earliest] comprehension, thus derives its proof from an external source, is (they say) to make an assertion which is utterly worthless.⁷ But this objection of theirs is as vain as beating the air with their fists. [Such a thing as] a production from the constituents of knowledge [being admitted], it is in not being produced from any cause distinct from that, that the self-derivation of truth [or knowledge] consists. This results from the explanation of the term itself. And here we have also an inference [to rely upon]. There being [such a thing as] a production from the constituents of knowledge, variously-understood truth [or knowledge] does not spring from anything distinct from this, since it has not erroneousness as its basis, as jars, etc., [have no unhomogeneous material as their basis (?)]. Nor is it to be surmised that Udayana's inference proves [authoritativeness to have] an external source. Correct knowledge does not, like error, spring from anything distinct from the cause of a knowledge which is devoid of defects, because it is knowledge, so that [Udayana's objection] is carried away by the demon of adverse proof [?]. And since it appears that authoritativeness springs from the simple constituents of knowledge, if you suppose that any quality distinct from that, or that the absence of defect, is the cause [of authoritativeness], you will incur the charge of making more suppositions than are necessary to explain the facts. If it be objected to this, that since defect is the cause of unauthoritativeness, it cannot be denied that the absence of defect must be the cause of authoritativeness, we deny this, since the absence of defect (or faultlessness) is, on other grounds, not proved⁸ to be that which prevents unauthoritativeness."

I shall not attempt to carry farther my translation of this abstruse discussion, as the remainder contains several parts which I should find it difficulty to render. The real proof or disproof of the authority of the Veda must rest on grounds very

The following passage from Śankara's commentary on the Brahma Sūtras, iii. 2, 40, is partly quoted in Prof. Banerjea's forthcoming work on Hindu Philosophy. In the two preceding Sūtras, as explained by Śankara, it had been asserted, both on grounds of reason and on the authority of the Veda, that God is the author of rewards. In the 40th Sūtra a different doctrine is ascribed to Jaimini: Dharmañ Jaiminir ata eva || Jaiminis tv āchāryyo dharmam phalasya dātāram manyate | ata eva hetoḥ śruter upapattēscha | śrūyate tāvad ayam arthaḥ 'svarga-kāmo yajeta' ity evam ādishu vākyeshu | tatra cha vidhi-śruter vishaya-bhāvopagamād yāgaḥ svargasya utpādakaḥ iti gamyate | anyathā hy ananushtthātriko yāga āpadyeta tatra asya upadēsasya vaiyarthyañ syāt | nanv anuxana-vināśinaḥ karmanāḥ phalañ na upapadyate iti parityakto 'yam paxaḥ | na esha doshaḥ śruti-prāmānyāt | śrutiś chet pramānañ yathā 'yañ karma-phala-sambandhaḥ śrutaḥ upapadyate tathā kalpayitavyaḥ | na cha anutpādya kimapy apūrvam karma vinaśyat kālāntaritam phalañ dātuñ śaknoti ity atah karmano vā sūxmā kāchid uttarāvasthā phalasya vā pūrvāvasthā apūrvam nāma asti iti tarkyate | upapadyate cha ayam arthaḥ uktena prakāreṇa | Īśvarastu phalañ dadāti ity anupapannam avichitrasya kāraṇasya vichitra-kāryyānupapatteḥ | vaishamyā-nairghṛīnyā-prasaṅgād anushthāna-vaiyarthyaḥ cha | tasmād dharmād eva phalam iti | "Jaimini says that for this reason virtue [is the giver of reward]. The Āchāryya Jaimini regards virtue [i.e., the performance of the prescribed rites and duties] as the bestower of reward. 'For this reason,' and because it is proved by the Veda. This is the purport of the Vedic text, 'Let the man who seeks paradise, sacrifice,' and others of the same kind. As here, we learn the existence of the object [referred to] in the Vedic injunction in question, it is concluded that sacrifice has the effect of producing heaven; for otherwise we should be involved in the absurdity of a sacrifice without a performer [since no one would care to sacrifice without an object?], and thus the injunction would become fruitless. But may it not be said that it is not conceivable that any fruit should result from a ceremony which perishes every moment, so that this view must be abandoned? No, this defect does not attach to our Mīmānsaka statement, since the Veda is authoritative. If the Veda be proof, this connection of the reward with the ceremony must be supposed to exist just as it is proved in the Veda. And from the fact that a ceremony which perishes without generating any unseen virtue, can yet produce a reward at a distant time, it must not be concluded that there is either a certain subtle ulterior form of the ceremony, or a certain subtle anterior form of the reward, which is called 'unseen virtue.' And this result is established in the manner before mentioned. But it is not proved that God bestows rewards, because it is inconceivable that a uniform cause should produce various effects, and because the performance of ceremonies would be useless, owing to the inequality and unmercifulness which would attach [to the supposed arbiter of men's deserts]. Hence it is from virtue that reward results."

How far this passage may be sufficient to prove the atheism of the Mīmānsa, I will not attempt to say. Before we could decide on such a question, the Sūtras of that school which refer to this question (if there be any such) would have to be consulted.

Professor Banerjea also quotes the following text from the popular work, the Vidvan-modataranginī, in which the Mīmānsakas are distinctly charged with atheism: Devo na kaśchid bhuvanasya karttā bharttā na harttā 'pi cha kaśchid āste | karmānurūpāni śubhāśubhāni prāpnoti sarvo hi janaḥ phalāni || vedasya karttā na cha kaśchid āste nityā hi śabdāḥ rachanā hi nityā | prāmānyam asmin svata eva siddham anādi-siddheḥ parataḥ katham tat | "There is no God, maker of the world; nor has it any sustainer or destroyer; for every man obtains a recompense in conformity with his works. Neither is there any maker of the Veda, for its words are eternal, and their arrangement is eternal. Its authoritative-ness is self-demonstrated, for since this authoritative-ness has been established from eternity, how can it be dependent upon anything beyond itself?"

I am informed by Prof. Banerjea that the Mīmāṃsaka commentator Prabhākara and his school make out the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā to be an atheistic system, while Kumārila treats it as theistic. The last named author makes the following complaint at the commencement of his Vārttika, verse 10 : Prāyenaiva hi mīmāṃsā loke lokāyatīkṛitā | tām āstika-pathe kartum ayaṃ yatnaḥ kṛito mayā | "For in practice the Mīmāṃsā has been for the most part converted into a Lokāyata (atheistic) system (see Colebrooke's Essays, i. 402 ff., or pp. 259 ff. of W. and N.'s ed.); but I have made this effort to bring it into a theistic path." See also the lines which are quoted from the Padma Purana by Vijnāna Bhixu, commentator on the Sāṅkhya aphorisms, in a passage which I shall adduce further on, in a note on p. 103.

The Tarka-sangraha⁹ says : Vākyaṃ dvividhaṃ vaidikaṃ laukikaṅcha | vaidikam Īśvaroktatvāt sarvam eva pramāṇam | laukikantu āptoktam pramāṇam anyad apramāṇam | "Sentences are of two kinds, Vedic and secular. Vedic sentences, from being uttered by Īśvara, are all proof [or authoritative]. Of secular sentences, those only which are uttered by a competent [or wise] person (āpta) are proof; the rest are not proof."

In this text, the authority of the Veda is founded on its being uttered by Īśvara; and this characteristic is regarded as limited to the Veda. On the other hand, such secular works as proceed from a competent person (āpta) are also declared to possess authority. Here, therefore, a distinction appears to be drawn between the authority of the Veda and that of all other writings, however authoritative, inasmuch as the former was uttered by Īśvara, while the latter have only been uttered by some competent person (āpta). But in the Nyāya aphorism, ii. 68, quoted in p. 80, the authority of the Veda itself is made to rest on the authority of the wise, or competent person (āpta), from whom it proceeded. In the aphorism, therefore, either the word āpta must mean Īśvara, or we must suppose a difference of view between the author of the aphorism and the writer of the Tarka-sangraha. We shall see in the next note that the author of the Kusumāñjali coincides with the Tarka-sangraha.

If the author of the Nyāya Sūtras did not believe in an Īśvara (see the conclusion of the next note), he could not of course derive the Veda from such a source. Prof. Banerjea, in his forthcoming work on Hindu Philosophy, quotes the following definition of the word āpta from Vātsāyana: Āptaḥ khalu sākāt-kṛita-dharmā | yathā-dṛiṣṭasya arthasya chikhyāpayi-shayā prayuktaḥ upadeshtā | sākāt-karanam arthasya āptis | tayā varttate ity āptaḥ | “A competent person (āpta) means one who has an intuitive perception of duty (the word sākāt-kṛita-dharman is used in the Nirukta, i. 20; see Part Second, pp. 174 and 176; and p. 95, note 48, above),—an instructor possessed by the desire of communicating some subject-matter, just as it was seen by him. This intuitive perception constitutes competence (āpti). A person who has this competence is competent.” Āpta would thus be equivalent to rishi, and could not refer to Īśvara.

The following words are put by the author of the Vishnu Purana (iii. ch. 18; Wilson, p. 340) into the mouth of the deluder who promulgated the Bauddha and other heresies: Na hy āpta-vādā nabhaso nīpatanti mahāsurāḥ | yuktimad vachanañ grāhyam mayā 'nyaiścha bhavadvidhaiḥ | “Words of the competent do not, great Asuras, fall from the sky. It is only words supported by reasons that should be admitted by me and others like yourselves.”

I extract from the Kusumāñjali of Udayana Āchārya, and its commentary (published at the Sanskrit Press, Calcutta, in the Śaka year, 1769), some fuller statements of the Naiyāyika doctrine regarding the origin and authority of the Veda. Mr. Colebrooke (Ess. i. 263, or p. 166 of W. and N.'s ed.) speaks of this treatise as being accompanied by a commentary of Nārāyana Tīrtha; but the one which is printed in the Calcutta edition, is said to be by Haridāsa Bhattāchārya. The object of the work appears to be to prove the existence of a personal god (Īśvara), in opposition to various other antagonistic theories.

I. “The second objection is that [there is no proof of an Īśvara], since the means of attaining paradise can be practised independently of any such Being. That is to say, the celebration of sacrifices, etc., which are the instruments of obtaining paradise, can take place otherwise, i.e., even without an Īśvara (God). For the fact that sacrifices, etc., are the instruments of obtaining paradise is to be learned from the Veda, while the authority of the Veda rests upon its eternal faultlessness; and the [immemorial] admission of that authority results from its reception by illustrious men. Now, as in this way the Veda is the cause [of final liberation], there is no proof of a God. Or let it be supposed that the Veda was preceded [composed] by Kapila and other sages, who by their wealth in devotion had acquired omniscience.

“In answer to this, the author says: [verse] ‘Since truth, [or authoritativeness] depends on an external source (see the passage from the Sarva-darsana-sangraha, above, p. 203), since creation and dissolution are probable, and since there is no confidence in any other than God, therefore no other manner can be conceived [in which the Veda originated, except from God (?)].’ [Comment] Scriptural truth [or authoritativeness] is derived from the attribute, possessed by its promulgator, of comprehending the true sense of words [i.e., in order to constitute the Veda an authoritative rule of duty, it must have proceeded from an intelligent being who understood the sense of what he uttered, and not, as some maintain (see above, pp. 83, 104, 105), from a being who unconsciously breathed it out]; and since God is the substratum of this attribute [of intelligence], there is proof of his existence.

“But it may be said, that this comprehension of the true sense of what is uttered may be a quality belonging to a created being; and, again, it may be the faultlessness of the uncreated

Veda, which imparts to it its authority, while the [immemorial] admission of that authority results from its reception by illustrious men.

“In answer to this, the author says: ‘Since creation and dissolution are probable.’ Since the previous Veda (the one which existed during the former mundane period) perished after the dissolution of the universe, how can the subsequent Veda [i.e., the one supposed by our opponents to have existed during the dissolution] be authoritative, since there was not then even any reception of it by illustrious men [who also had all become extinct at the dissolution]. That is to say, the non-eternity of sound is proved by the conviction we have that letters such as G are produced, [and not eternal]; and even that eternity (or perpetuity) of the Veda which consists in unbroken continuity of tradition, does not exist, as there is probable proof of a dissolution.¹⁰ But, again, some one will say that Kapila and other saints—who, from their perception of duty, springing from the practice of devotion during the former mundane period, had acquired an intuitive knowledge of every subject—may at the creation have been the authors of the Veda. This is answered in the words, ‘since there is no confidence in any other but God.’ If persons capable of creating the universe and possessing the faculty of minuteness be omniscient, then, for the sake of simplicity, let one such person only be admitted, namely, the divine Īśvara. And no confidence can be reposed in any person who is not eternal, or who is not possessed of a knowledge which extends to all objects. Thus the Vedic tradition [?] disappears. And so he concludes that no other manner [of the origination of the Veda?] can be conceived [except from Īśvara?]; that is, in the system of those who deny an Īśvara [no hypothesis

II. Kusumānjali, iii. 16.—Na pramānam anāptoktir nādrishṭe kvachid āptatā | adrīśya-drīshṭau sarvajño na cha nityāgamah xamaḥ | ayaṁ hi sarva-karṭrītvābhāvāvedakah śabdah anāptoktaś ched na pramānam | āptoktaś ched etad-artha-gochara-jñānavato nitya-sarva-vishayaka-jñānavattvam indriyādy-abhāvāt | āgamaśya cha nityatvaṁ dūṣhitam eva prāg iti veda-kāro nityaḥ sarvajñaḥ siddhyati | [Verse] “The word of an incompetent person is not authoritative; nor can there be any competency in regard to a thing unseen. To perceive invisible things, a person must be omniscient; and an eternal scripture is impossible. [Comment] This [supposed] scriptural testimony, denying the fact of any creation whatever, if uttered by an incompetent person, would be no proof. If it was uttered by a competent person, then the person who possessed an acquaintance with this circumstance [universal non-creation] would be master of a knowledge which was eternal, and universal in its range, from his not being limited by any bodily organs. And we have previously disproved the eternity of any scripture (see the first extract from the Kusumānjali, above). Consequently an omniscient and eternal author of the Veda is established.”

III. Kusumānjali, v. 1.—Kāryyāyojana-dhṛityādeḥ padāt pratyayataḥ śruteḥ | vākyāt saṅkhyā-viśeshāchcha sādhyo visva-vid aryayah | . . . Pratyayataḥ prāmānyāt | veda-janya-jñānām kāraṇa-guṇa-janyam pramātvāt | pratyaxādi-pramā-vat | śruter vedāt | vedaḥ paurusheyo vedatvād āyurveda-vat | kiñcha vedaḥ paurusheyo vākyatvād bhāratādi-vat | veda-vākyāni paurusheyāni vākyatvād asmad-ādi-vākya-vat | [Verse] “An omniscient and indestructible Being is to be proved from [the existence of] effects, from the junction of [atoms], from the support [of the earth in the sky], from action, from belief [in revelation], from the Veda, from sentences, and from particular numbers.”

tiveness. The knowledge derived from the Veda is derived from the attributes of its Cause; since it is true knowledge, like the true knowledge derived from perception. From the śruti, i.e., the Veda. The Veda is [shewn to be] derived from a person, by its having the characters of a Veda, like the Ayur-veda. It is also [shewn to be] derived from a person, by having the character of sentences, like the Mahābhārata. The words of the Veda are [shewn to be] derived from a person, by their having the character of sentences, like the sentences of persons such as ourselves."

IV. Kusumānjali, v. 16.—‘Syām’ ‘abhūvam’ ‘bhavishyāmi’ ‘tyādau saṅkhyā pravakṛi-gā | samākhyā ‘pi cha śākhānām nādyā-pravachanād ṛite | Vaidikottama-purushena svatantrōchchārayituh saṅkhyā vāchyā | ‘sa aixata eko ‘ham bahu syām’ ityādi bakulam uttama-purusha śruteḥ | saṅkhyā-padārtham anyam āha ‘samākhyā’ ityādi | sarvāsām śākhānām hi Kāthaka-Kālāpakādyāḥ saṅkhyāḥ saṅkhyā-viśeshāḥ śrūyante | te cha na adhyayana-mātra-nibandhanāḥ | adhyetrīṇām ānantyāt | anādāv anyair api tad-adhyayanāt | tasmād atīndriyārtha-darśi bhagavān eva Īśvaraḥ kārunikāḥ sargādāv asmad-ādy-adṛiṣṭākṛiṣṭa [ḥ?]”¹¹ kāthakādi-sarīra-viśesham adhishṭhāya yām yām śākhām uktavāms tasyāḥ śākhāyās tannāmnā vyapadeśa iti siddham Īśvara-mananam moxa-ketuḥ | [Verse] “The phrases ‘let me be,’ ‘I was,’ ‘I shall be,’ [which occur in the Veda.] have reference to a speaker; and the designations of the śākhās could only have been derived from a primeval utterance. [Comment] The first person (I), when it occurs in the Veda, must be employed to denote the words of a self-dependent utterer. Now there are many instances there of such a use of the first person, as in the words, ‘He reflected, I am one, let me become many.’ The author then specifies another signification of the term ‘word,’ or ‘name,’ (saṅkhyā) in the clause, ‘and the designations,’ etc. For all the śākhās bear in the Veda the names, the special names, of Kāthaka, Kālāpaka, etc. And these names cannot be connected with the mere study [of these śākhās by Katha, Kālāpa, etc.] from the infinite multitude of students, since if the Veda had no beginning, it must have been studied by others besides the persons just mentioned. Wherefore the particular śākhās which Īśvara, the seer of objects beyond the reach of the senses, the compassionate Lord himself uttered,—when at the beginning of the creation, drawn on by the destiny (adriṣṭa) of beings like ourselves, he assumed the bodies of Katha, etc.,—these śākhās, I say, were designated by the names of the particular sages [in whose persons they were promulgated]. And so it is proved that the contemplation of Īśvara is the cause of final liberation.”

¹¹ I have translated as if there had been a visarga at the end of this word, though there is none in the Calcutta text. If the visarga be not allowed, we must translate, “the bodies of Katha, etc., which were drawn by the destiny,” etc.

I am unable to say if the ancient doctrine of the Nyāya was theistic, like that of the Kusumāñjali, the Tarka-sangraha,¹² and the Siddhānta Muktaṅgali (p. 6 of Dr. Ballantyne's ed., or p. 12 of his “Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy,” and p. 3 of Dr. Röer's Bhāṣhā-parichcheda, in Bibl. Ind.) The remarks of Dr. Röer on the subject, in pp. xv., xvi., of the introduction to the last named work, may be consulted. The subject is also discussed by Prof. Banerjea in his forthcoming work on Hindu philosophy. The solution of the question will depend much on the interpretation to be given to the aphorisms of Gotama, 19-21 of the fourth book.

I find that the phrase kālātyayāpadishṭa, which here (and in p. 91, line 21) I have rendered “refuted by the length of time,” is a technical term in the Nyāya philosophy, denoting one of the hetv-ābhāsas, or “mere semblances of reasons,” and is thus defined in the Nyāya Sūtras, i. 49 : Kālātyayāpadishṭaḥ kālā-tītaḥ | which Dr. Ballantyne (Aph. of the Nyāya, p. 42) thus explains : “That [semblance of a reason] is Mistimed, which is adduced when the time is not [that when it might have availed].”

“[For example, suppose one argues that] fire does not contain heat, because it is factitious, [his argument is mistimed, if we have already ascertained, by the superior evidence of the senses, that fire does contain heat].”

NOTE VIII. on Page 103, Line 9.

I find that Vijnāna Bhixu, the commentator on the Sāṅkhya aphorisms, takes very nearly the same view as is here quoted from Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, in regard to the superiority of the Brahma Mīmāṃsā or Vedānta over the other Darśanas.

In his Sāṅkhya-pravachana-bhāṣhya (Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 3 ff.), he thus writes : Syād etat | Nyāya-vaisekikābhyām atra avirodho bhavatu | brahma-mīmāṃsā-yogābhyām tu virodho 'sty eva | tābhyām nityeśvara-sādhanāt | atra cha Īśvarasya pratiśhidhyamānatvāt | na cha atrāpi vyāvahārika-pāramārthikābhedenā seśvara-nirīśvara-vādayor avirodho 'stu seśvara-vādasya upāsana-paratva-sambhavād iti vāchyam | vinigamakābhāvāt | īśvaro hi durjñeya iti nirīśvaratvam api loka-vyāvahāra-siddham aiśvarya-vairāgyāya anuvaditaṁ śakyate ātmanaḥ sagunatvam iva | na tu krāpi śrutyādāv īśvaraḥ sphuṭam pratishidhyate yena

“ Be it so : let there be here no discrepancy with the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika. But it will be said that the Sāṅkhya is really opposed to the Brahma-mīmāṃsā (the Vedānta) and the Yoga [of Patanjali]; since both of these systems assert an eternal Īśvara (God), while the Sāṅkhya denies such an Īśvara. And it must not be said (the same persons urge) that here also [as in the former case of the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika], owing to the distinction between practical [or conventional, or regulative] and essential truths, there may be no [real] contrariety between the theistic and the atheistic theories, inasmuch as it appears that the theistic theory has a view to devotion [and may therefore have nothing more than a practical end in view];—you are not, it will be said, to assert this, as there is nothing to lead to this conclusion [or, distinction]. For as Īśvara is difficult to be known, the atheistic theory also, which is founded on popular opinion, may, indeed, be maintained for the purpose of inspiring indifference to the divine majesty, (just as it is [erroneously] asserted that soul has [the three] qualities); but neither the Veda, nor any other śāstra contains a distinct denial of an Īśvara, by which the merely practical [or conventional] character of the theistic theory could be shewn. [Consequently the theistic theory is not a mere conventional one, but true, and the contradiction between the atheistic Sāṅkhya and the theistic systems is real and irreconcilable].

To this we reply: in this case also the distinction of practical and essential truths holds. For the atheistic theory is censured by such texts as the following: 'They declare a world without an Īśvara to be false and baseless.' Now it was proper that in this system (the Sāṅkhya), the merely practical [or conventional] denial [of Īśvara] should be inculcated for the purpose of inspiring indifference to the divine majesty, and so forth. Because the idea of the author of the Sāṅkhya was this, that if the existence of an eternal Īśvara were not denied, in conformity with the doctrine of the Laukāyatikas, men would be prevented by the contemplation of a perfect, eternal, and faultless godhead, and by fixing their hearts upon it, from studying to discriminate [between spirit and matter]. But no censure on the theistic theory is to be found in any religious work, whereby [the scope of] that system might be restricted, as having devotion, etc., in view, as its only end. And as regards such texts as the following:—'There is no knowledge like the Sāṅkhya, no power like the Yoga; doubt not of this, the knowledge of the Sāṅkhya is considered to be the highest,' they [are to be understood as] proving the superiority of the Sāṅkhya doctrine over other systems, not in respect of its atheism, but only of its discrimination [between different principles]. In the same way it is established by the colloquy of Parāśara, and all other well-instructed persons, that the theistic theory is that which represents the essential truth. Further, such texts as the following of the Parāśara Upapurana, and other works, shew the strength of the Brahma-mīmāṃsā on the side of its theism, viz., 'In the systems of Āxapāda (Gotama) and Kanāda, and in the Sāṅkhya and Yoga, that part which is opposed to the Veda should be rejected by all persons who regard the Veda as the sole authority. In the systems of Jaimini and Vyāsa (the Vedānta) there is no portion contrary to the Veda, since both these sages, by [adhering to] the Veda [itself], have obtained a perfect comprehension of its true meaning.' In the same way it results from this text of the Moxa-dharma (a part of the Śānti-parva of the Mahābhārata), viz. : 'Many systems of reasoning have been promulgated by different authors ; [in these] whatever is established on grounds of reason, of scripture, and of approved custom, is to be respected ;' [from this text also, I say, it results] that the theory,—declared in the Brahma-mīmāṃsā, the Nyāya, the Vaiśeshika, etc., in consonance with the tradition of Parāśara and all other well-instructed men,—which asserts an Īśvara, is alone to be received, in consequence of its strength ; and [it is] also [to be received] because in such passages as this of the Kaurma-purana, viz.,—'Take refuge with that Maheśvara, that Brahma without beginning or end, whom the most eminent Yogis, and the Sāṅkhyas do not behold,'—Nārāyaṇa (Vishnu) asserts that the Sāṅkhyas are ignorant of Īśvara.

Moreover, Īśvara is determined to be the principal subject of the Brahma-mīmāṃsā by the introductory statement, etc., of that system. If it were open to objection on that side [i.e., on the side of its principal subject], the entire system would be without authority. For it is a rule of logic that 'the sense of a word is that which it is intended to denote.' But the principal subjects of the Sāṅkhya are—(1) the grand object of human pursuit, and—(2) the distinction between nature (prakṛiti) and spirit (puruṣa), which is the instrument of attaining that grand object. Thus the Sāṅkhya does not lose its authority, even though it be erroneous in so far as it denies an Īśvara. For it is a rule of logic that 'the sense of a word is that which it is intended to denote.' Hence, from its being an

Nor can it be alleged that it is Īśvara only, and not the eternity of his existence, that is the principal subject of the Brahma-mīmāṃsā; since, through the disproof of the objection (pūrva-paxa) that the theistic theory 'is chargeable with the defect of rendering the smṛiti inapplicable,'¹³ it is ascertained that the assertion of an eternal Īśvara is the main object of the Brahma-mīmāṃsā. But as the word Brahma is principally employed to denote the supreme Brahma, the first aphorism of the Brahma-mīmāṃsā does not run thus, 'Now follows the enquiry regarding the supreme Brahma;' but thus, 'Now follows the enquiry regarding Brahma.' Hence we are not to surmise that, from their [otherwise] contradicting the Sāṅkhya, the Brahma-mīmāṃsā and Yoga systems must aim at establishing [not an eternal Deity] but a [secondary] Īśvara, who is merely an effect. For this is disproved (1) by the Brahma Sūtra (ii. 2, 1) which (founding on the objection that exists to the independent action of Pradhāna or nature) concludes that 'an unintelligent cause of the world cannot be inferred, as it is not conceivable that it should have been framed by such a cause,' and by the series of the following sūtras ; and (2) by the fact that the eternity of God is clearly understood from the Yoga aphorism [i. 26], viz., 'He is also the instructor of the ancients, as he is not circumscribed by time,' as well as from the commentary of Vyāsa thereon.¹⁴ Thus [if we take into account the difference between] the exoteric and esoteric methods of discussion,¹⁵ [we shall find that] as the Sāṅkhya has in view a [merely] practical denial of an Īśvara, it does not contradict the Brahma-mimāṃsā or the Yoga. The exoteric method [or method of approach, to which allusion has been made] is referred to in the Śāstra. Thus it is said in the Vishnu Purana [i. 17, 54, Wilson, p. 132], 'These notions, Daityas, which I have described, are the mistakes of persons who look on the Deity as distinct from themselves. Hear now briefly from me [the views of those who] have made an approach [? to the truth].'

"Or let it be [supposed] that even theistic systems, with the view of preventing sinners from attaining knowledge, lay down doctrines which are partially opposed to the Veda ; and that in those particular portions they are not authoritative. Still, in their principal contents, which are consonant to the śruti and the smṛiti, they possess authority. Accordingly, in the Padma Purana we find a censure passed even upon the several philosophical systems (darśanas), with the exception of the Brahma (the Vedānta) and the Yoga. For in that work Īśvara (Mahādeva) says to Pārvatī, 'Listen, goddess, while I declare to you the tāmasa works (the works characterised by tamas, or the quality of darkness) in order ; works by the mere hearing of which even wise men become fallen. First of all, the Śaiva systems, called Pāśupata, etc., were delivered by myself. Then the following were uttered by Brahmans penetrated by my power, viz. (2), the great Vaiśeṣika system of which Kanāda was the author, and (3) the Nyāya and (4) Sāṅkhya, which were promulgated by Gotama and Kapila respectively. Then (5) the great system, the Pūrva-[mīmāṃsā] was composed by the Brahman Jaimini from Vedic materials, but on atheistic principles. So too (6) the abominable Chārvāka doctrine was declared by Dhishana,¹⁵ while Vishnu, in the form of Buddha, with a view to the destruction of the Daityas,¹⁶ promulgated (7) the false system of the Bauddhas, who go about naked, or wear blue garments. I myself, goddess, assuming the form of a Brahman, uttered in the Kali age, the untrue theory of māyā [illusion, the more modern form of the Vedānta], which is covert Buddhism, which imputes a perverted and generally censured signification to the words of the Veda, and inculcates the abandonment of ceremonial works, and an inactivity consequent on such cessation. In that system I propound the identity of the supreme and the embodied soul, and show that the highest form of Brahma is that in which he is devoid of the [three] qualities. It was I myself, goddess, by whom this great śāstra, which, composed of Vedic materials and inculcating the theory of illusion, is yet un-Vedic, was declared in the Kali age for the destruction of this entire universe.' We have entered into fuller explanations on this subject in the Brahma-mīmāṃsā-bhāṣhya. There is, therefore, no want of authority, nor any contradiction, in any theistic system, for they are all incapable of refutation in their own especial subjects, and are not mutually discrepant. Does, then, this system (the Sāṅkhya) lay down a merely exoteric theory in respect of the multitude of souls also? It does not. For in the Brahma-mīmāṃsā also it is determined by such kinds of texts as the following (Brahma Sūtras, ii.

3, 43), viz., 'the embodied spirit is a part of the supreme soul, from the variety of appellations,' that there is a multitude of embodied spirits. But it is denied by the Brahma-mīmāṃsā that the spirits (puruṣha) asserted by the Sāṅkhya have the character of Soul; for it is determined by the Brahma Sūtra (iv. 1, 3), 'they approach Him as one with themselves,'¹⁷ that on the ground of transcendental truth, the supreme Soul alone has the character of Soul. But, nevertheless, the Sāṅkhya is not unauthoritative; for as the other discriminative knowledge possessed by the embodied spirit in its worldly condition is instrumental to final liberation, this system is not erroneous in the particular subject matter which it aims at propounding. In this way it results from the distinction of practical and real which exists between the two theories (made known by the śruti (Veda) and smṛiti), of a multitude of souls, and the unity of all soul, that [the Sāṅkhya] is not contrary [to the Vedānta]."

Sāyana's Introduction to R. V. vol i. p. 23.—Manushya-ṛitānta-pratipādakā ṛichō nārāśaṃśyah | "The nārāśaṃśis are verses which set forth the histories of men."

If these nārāśaṃśis were ṛichah, verses of the hymns, and if, according to Sāyana's definition, their object was to record events in human history, it follows that these verses must have referred to non-eternal objects. Either therefore Sāyana's definition must be wrong, or the author of the Mīmāṃsā Sūtras must have made a mistake in asserting that the hymns contain no reference to events which have taken place in time.

The expression here employed, pitṛīnāñcha manmabhīḥ, is repeated in R. V. x. 57, 3 (= Vāj. Sanh. 3, 53): Mano nu ā huwāmahe nārāśaṁsena somena pitṛīnāñcha manmabhīḥ | “We invoke his spirit with soma accompanied by human praises, and by the hymns [or prayers] of the fathers.”

The Vāj. San. Sanhitā reads stomena, “hymn,” instead of somena. The commentator there explains nārāśaṁsena stotrena as a “hymn in which men are praised,” and pitṛīnāñcha manmabhīḥ as hymns “in which the fathers are revered” (pitaro yaiḥ stotrair manyante te manmānas tair ityādi).

I should have recalled attention here to the verse of the Purusha Sūkta, R. V. x. 90, 9, quoted in p. 10, and also in Part First, pp. 7 and 8, in which the Rik and Sāma verses, the metres, and the Yajush are said to have sprung from the great mystical victim Purusha.

We have also seen that in the passage of the Atharva-veda cited at the top of p. 11, two of the Vedas are said to have sprung from Time. The same Veda, as quoted by Prof. Goldstücker in the Preface to his Mānava-kalpa-sūtra, p. 70, assigns yet another origin to the Vedas. Ath. V. xi. 7, 24: Ṛichaḥ sāmāni chhandāṁsi purāṇāṁ yajushā sahā | uchchhishṭāj jajñire ityādi | “The Rik and Sāma verses, the metres, the Purana, with the Yajus, sprang from the remainder of the sacrifice.”

It appears from Prof. Benfey’s note on S. V. ii. 294 (= R. V. ix. 96, 6, quoted in p. 163), that the scholiast on that passage also makes devānām = ṛitvijām, “priests.”

NOTE XIII. on Page 176, Line 12.

Yo yajñasya prasādhanas tantur deveshu ātatata tam āhutaṁ naśimahi | “ May we obtain [?] him [Agni?] whom we have invoked, who is the fulfiller of sacrifice, who is the thread stretched to the gods.”

Prof. Roth quotes under the word tantu the following text from the Taittirīya Brahmana, ii. 4, 2, 6 : *Ā tantum Agnir dīvyam tatāna | tvam nas tantur uta setur Agne tvam panthā
 Thou, Agni, art our thread and bridge ; thou art the path leading to the gods.”

As Prof. Goldstücker has only given (in p. 146 of his Preface) a translation of the above extract from Patanjali, and has left the passages from Kaiyyata and Nagojibhatta untranslated, I shall give his version of the first, and my own rendering of the two last.

Patanjali.—"Is it not said, however, that 'the Vedas are not made, but that they are permanent (i.e., eternal)?' (Quite so); yet, though their sense is permanent, the order of their letters has not always remained the same; and it is through the difference in this latter respect that we may speak of the versions of the Kāṭhas, Kalāpas, Mudakas, Pippalādakas, and so on." Kaiyyata on Patanjali.—"Eternal;' by this word he means that they are so, because no maker of them is remembered. By the words, 'the order of their letters,' etc., it is meant that, the order of the letters being destroyed in the great dissolutions of the universe, etc., the rishis, when they are again produced, recollecting, through their eminent science, the sense of the Veda, arrange the order of the words. By the phrase, 'through the difference of this,' is meant the difference of order. Consequently, Katha and the other sages [to whom allusion was made] are the authors of the order of the Veda." Nagojibhaṭṭa on Patanjali and Kāṣyapa.—"Admitting in part the eternity of the Veda, he declares in the words, 'though the sense is eternal,' etc., that it is also in part not eternal. By this clause, vedicity, or the essence of the Veda, is [declared to consist in] being sound composed of both its constituents, viz., words and their meanings. But is not the order eternal, since it is a settled doctrine, both of the new and the elder Mīmāṃsakas,¹⁸ on the strength of such Vedic texts as this, 'the creator made them as before,' etc., that the order also is the very same? No; this is incorrect, and in consequence, he says, 'in the great dissolutions,' etc. Some say the meaning of this is, that the order is not eternal, inasmuch as it exists in particular [or successive] moments. But this is wrong, because it is opposed to the rest of the sentence, viz., the words, 'though their sense is eternal,' etc., and because the objects signified also, such as the jyotish-ṭoma sacrifice, are not eternal. Others say that both the sense and the order of the words are eternal [or permanent], owing to the continuity of the tradition; and that consequently it is in different manvantaras that the order of the words is different, according to the text, 'in every manvantara this śruti (Veda) is made different.' Others again think that in the words, 'the sense is eternal,' etc., an assertion is made by an objector of a non-eternity opposed to [mere] production, since it is only such a [qualified] eternity [or permanence] that is mentioned in the Veda; and that thus the word 'sense,' or 'object' (arthak), here refers to Īśvara, because he is the principal object which is had in view in the whole of the Veda, according to the words of the Bhagavad-gītā (xv. 15),

‘It is I whom all the Vedas seek to know.’ He next states the proof of the assertion that the order of the letters is not eternal, in the words, ‘through the difference of this,’ etc. The difference in the order is proved by the difference in the things included under the category of non-eternity. Difference here means variety. But in Īśvara (God), there is no variety. He declares ordinary practice to be the proof of difference, in the words ‘Kāthaka,’ etc., which mean that, though the sense is the same, we use the distinctions of Kāthaka, Kālāpaka, etc., in consequence of the difference of order. Here by saying that the order is not eternal, it is meant that the words are the same, and thus the [full] character [of the Veda], as sound [consisting both of words and their meanings, is preserved?]. And this is what is asserted in the words, ‘consequently Katha and the other sages,’ etc.”

After quoting these passages at greater length than I have given them, Prof. Goldstücker goes on to remark in his note: “I have quoted the full gloss of the three principal commentators, on this important Sūtra [of Panini] and its Vārttikas, because it is of considerable interest in many respects. . . . We see Kaiyyāṭa and Nāgojibhaṭṭa writhing under the difficulty of reconciling the eternity of the Veda with the differences of its various versions, which, nevertheless, maintain an equal claim to infallibility. Patanjali makes rather short work of this much vexed question; and unless it be allowed here to render his expression varna (which means ‘letter’), ‘word,’ it is barely possible even to understand how he can save consistently the eternity or permanence of the ‘sense’ of the Veda. That the modern Mīmāṃsists maintain not only the ‘eternity of the sense,’ but also the ‘permanence of the text,’ which is tantamount to the exclusive right of one single version, we learn, amongst others, from Nāgojibatta. But as such a doctrine has its obvious dangers, it is not shared in by the old Mīmāṃsists, nor by Nāgoji, as he tells us himself. He and Kaiyyāṭa inform us therefore that amongst other theories, there is one, according to which the order of the letters (or rather words) in the Vaidik texts got lost in the several Pralayas or destructions of the worlds; and since each Manwantara had its own revelation, which differed only in the expression, not in the sense of the Vaidik texts, the various versions known to these commentators represent these successive revelations, which were 'remembered,' through their 'excessive accomplishments,' by the Rishis, who in this manner produced, or rather reproduced, the texts current in their time, under the name of the versions of the Kaṭhas, Kalāpas, and so on. In this way each version had an equal claim to sanctity. There is a very interesting discussion on the same subject by Kumāṛila, in his Mīmāṃsā-vārttika (i. 3, 10)."
